The Langmaids are honored at Town Meeting

By Jane Lane
Mariner Staff

It's not often that town meeting can approve anything unanimously. Monday night was notable when voters not only passed a resolution, but included a standing ovation.

The accolades were not aimed at anything controversial. It was agreed, school committee member Jack Langmaid deserved the recognition.

Without debate but with hearty approval, town meeting approved a resolution in honor of Jack and his wife, Chartis.

Presented on behalf of past and present School Committees and the parents of Cohasset.

Whereas John F. Langmaid III, has served nine years on the School Committee, giving his time and energy to countless projects and issues, and

Whereas his broad knowledge, wise council, wry sense of humor and thoughtful contribution to the Committee will be sorely missed, and

Whereas he had the foresight to marry a lady, Chartis B. Langmaid, whose strength, support and helpful council will also be sincerely missed.

Be it resolved that the citizens here assembled at the 1986 Annual Town Meeting express their deep gratitude and appreciation for his years of volunteer effort on behalf of the children and school system in Cohasset.

Jack and Chartis Langmaid were honored during a reception prior to Monday night's town meeting. Jack decided not to run for re-election after nine years on the school committee. (Eric Francis)

After reading the school committee's resolution at the start of Tuesday's town meeting, residents rose from their seats in his honor.

Earlier, at a reception held at the high school for Langmaid, the same resolution was recited by committee member Diana Kornet. The guests responded with heartfelt applause.

"I only hope as great a percentage of people over there (at town meeting) clap," he mused.

He continued, "I don't want to make a speech. It has been my privilege to serve. I greatly appreciate the fact the voters have given me their confidence. They don't give everyone their confidence. That makes me feel really good. I didn't step down because I felt I couldn't win."

Langmaid quipped with his fellow school committee members that he could take a year off and run again for another vacancy on the committee.

He decided two months ago not to try for a fourth term on the school committee. Physically disabled with rheumatoid arthritis, Langmaid decided to take time off this year from community commitments.

Even at Monday night's reception, Langmaid was dispensing advice to the school administrators, and disseminating literature for the committee chairman to peruse.

"He'll be sorely missed," Chairman Joseph Nedrow commented. "No one went over the issues more. He was always looking into other sides of an issue."

Prior to town meeting, more than 30 guests gathered at the high school home economics room

Jane Goff on the road again in Race by the Sea

By John Magadieu
Mariner Staff

Jane Goff, the new first lady of the Cohasset Rotary Club, made her inaugural run in the Cohasset Road Race by the Sea.

The Ledgewood Drive resident said she may have "caught the bug" again last Sunday. After five years away from running, she was pounding the pavements of her hometown.

The Rotary Club has sponsored the race for a decade. Goff said she and her husband Edward, the new president-elect, have served on the sidelines before.

"After so many years watching the runners, I said 'I'm going to get involved this year; I'm going to try it', " she said.

Goff explained that she wasn't compelled by the competition and put no pressure on herself to finish at a certain time. "I'm just doing it for fun," she said.

"The last organized race I did was five years ago," she said. "I ran the Diet Pepsi race in Scituate and the reason I'm here is because I just felt I wanted to try it out and see if I could do it after five years."

Goff explained that while she stopped running after the Scituate race, she kept in shape by swimming and doing aerobics.

"I did go out Monday and run the route," she said before the race. "I think it took me 65 minutes, but it was a gorgeous day. It was sunny, warm and beautiful."

Goff and her 700 running partners didn't have the luxury of sunshine on Sunday. It was cold and rainy.

"I think they say most runners prefer this type of weather," she said. "They say it makes it easier to do the run." Even so, Goff was prepared with her pink scarf and blue running suit.

"She wins in the best-dressed category," her husband said.

Her husband, sister Rosemary O'Connell, and children Priscilla, Courtney and Teddy were "all here to cheer me on," she said.

O'Connell had run the race before and offered her sister some advice.

"Take your time," she said, "and have some fun."

"Don't hesitate to stop and walk for a bit if you get winded," she added, "because unless you're an experienced runner, everyone stops somewhere along the way.

Usually the crowd and the other runners kind of get you motivated and get you to keep going," she said. "But along Forest Avenue and that last leg of the journey, that's where I stopped once or twice last year."

Goff said her daughter Priscilla was going to run,

Streeter qualified for new school position

Next year, some folks might mistakenly refer to Richard Streeter as Cohasset High School principal. Their mistakes will be honest ones because Streeter has been a fixture in the school the past 16 years.

He is now moving up to the position of assistant superintendent. He said of his transfer, "I guess it was an opportunity to get into some other phase of education and it just seemed to be an opportune time with Stephen Hart moving into the superintendency."

Hart, who is also a 16-year Cohasset educational veteran, has been administrator of the special education program for the system and assumed the position of assistant to the superintendent last year.

He explained Streeter is well-qualified to succeed him. "Mr. Streeter has many years of experience in public education, which certainly gives him a good perspective on the overall needs of the school system," Hart said.

In his new job, Streeter will act as financial manager for the school system and will also be in charge of bus transportation.

According to Hart, both Streeter and his successor also will have to deal with the dilemma of declining enrollment at the high school.

"We'll be fortunate," he said, "because in addition to the new school principal, we'll also have Mr. Streeter, who for most of his career has worked at

Town records review

The Secretary of State's public records division has reiterated its mandate that Cohasset maintain a new central repository for all town records.

The state ordered the town to provide a central vault for town records in 1976. "These records must no longer be left at risk and the town should pursue this goal either as an individual item or as part of a general rehabilitation of Town Hall," Records Analyst David Best stated in a letter to selectmen.

During a visit to the Cohasset Town Hall, Best said the town clerk's in-office files were generally in efficient order. "With the exception of the clerk's vault, however, this level of organization is lacking in the storage areas of town hall, where storage of records is confused and access difficult," he noted.

The vaults currently utilized for record-keeping at the town hall provide only minimal protection from fire for the materials. Additionally, Best commented, none of the storage areas can provide minimal environmental controls and the basement storeroom shared by selectmen and treasurer, is susceptible to dampness and the records are in danger of severe degradation because of mold and mildew.

"The inadequacy of the storage facilites at Town Hall is exemplified by the fact that it has been necessary to relocate records to the high school," he stated. But this was designed to be a temporary solution and can not be considered a permanent location, Best added.

Landfill public hearing

The Board of Health will hold a public hearing Thursday, April 10 at 8 p.m. at its office, 43 Elm Street. The hearing will be held to determine if Cohasset Heights Ltd. constitutes a nuisance or danger to public health.

If the landfill is determined to be a health hazard, the board of health may act to rescind, suspend, or modify the site assignment of the facility.

Engineers from Camp, Dresser and McKee will report the findings of a recent study of the landfill. Their conclusions will include a review of potential surface and groundwater contamination, plans for the closure of the facility and proposed post-closure requirements, and the necessity for provisions of financial assurances to conduct, implement and perform the requirements of the board.

Cohasset Heights has been invited to provide written and oral testimony and other documentation to address all the health board's concerns.

Officer disability

The Norfolk County Retirement System has approved the disability retirement of Police Officer John J. Rhodes III from the Cohasset Police Department.

Officer Rhodes suffered a heart attack last summer while off-duty. He has been on leave that time.

The retirement pension commenced Feb. 14.

the secondary level.

We will have two qualified people looking to that area and offering suggestions, he said.

Hart explained Streeter was a good choice for the assistant superintendent's post because of the type of work he's done at the high school.

"Mr. Streeter has had the responsibility for administering the high school budget," Hart added. "That is a large portion of the total budget. He is a very meticulous worker and he has a good facility for working with the financial and school program."

Superintendent Eugene Crowell agreed. "He is very well acquainted with and knowledgeable about computers and the financial managing techniques of the school system.

"He has been involved in producing the junior and senior high school schedules," Crowell added, "as well as running the attendance programs and overseeing the report card systems, which are similar in nature to the computerized business operations which he'll be taking over next year.

"He's a man who pays special attention to detail," Crowell said. "He is thorough and will bring the kind of organizational leadership to the position that we think is necessary.

"Another big plus is that he wants to come," Crowell added. "I think he is looking forward to the challenge and we are all very glad that he is willing to make the change."

Streeter explained that he was especially glad the new position "was created right here in this system.

"I've enjoyed it here," he said. "The school, the staff, the community...It's been a good experience."

Streeter recalled his first year here.

"My contract started July 1, 1970 and I was sleeping on the floor at the house I had just bought, waiting for the moving truck to come in," he said with a chuckle.

"When we moved here, my oldest daughter was a senior and my youngest daughter was a seventh-grader, so they both finished here and I was wearing two hats as a parent-principal."

He characterized Cohasset High School as "a public prep school," and the students as intellectuals.

"We have a high number of students who go on to college," he said. "We're a demanding school and we get tremendous support from parents."

Lately, Streeter has been busy trying to find someone who will be able to fill his shoes.

What kind of person is he looking for?

"That's difficult to say" he said. "I'd like to say 'a Streeter clone'." He laughed. "Obviously, it should be someone who has an interest in education, someone who can work well with people, community-wise as well as with the staff and faculty. It should be someone who has the commitment to spend a number of years here."

He explained that his job as principal has included designing the program of studies, building a master schedule and implementing the graduation guidelines and other policies set by the school committee.

Because they have already worked together, his assistant principal Gino DiGirolamo is a prime candidate for the principal's position, Streeter said.

Streeter said he doesn't have any specific advice for the new principal. "The person doesn't necessarily have to follow in my footsteps," he said.

"He can set up his own mode of operation as long as he's striving for the common goal."

Dear Cohasset Resident:

I am running for Selectman because I believe I can make a valuable contribution to improving the effectiveness of our town government.

There are many vital issues confronting the Town of Cohasset and the Board of Selectmen:
- the need for an open, equitable process of decision-making by the Selectmen, and strict adherence to the state Open Meeting Law;
- protection of our natural resources and quality of life through good land-use planning, effective enforcement of wetlands and septic regulations, and watershed protection measures;
- consistent, fair policies for dealing with town employees, and a speedy resolution of contract negotations with Cohasset Policemen, who have been working without a contract for almost two years.
- improved management of town government through the establishment of goals and objectives for town departments, setting program plans, and a system for review and evaluation of town departments; among many other issues.

During this campaign I have talked to many Cohasset residents about the town, and have learned much from these discussions. I am concerned about what you think, about which issues you think the Selectmen could deal better with, what areas of town government you think need improvement.

I would greatly appreciate your support and ONE of your TWO votes at the April 12th Town Election. Thank you.

Sincerely,

John K. McNabb Jr.

First sprinkler town in state

After a convincing argument by Fire Chief Daniel Brock, town meeting voted Saturday to require sprinkler systems in all new residences.

Cohasset is the first community in the state to require the residential systems, and one of the first in the country.

As Chief Brock stated Saturday, "after this meeting, I'm expecting a few phone calls. There are a lot of state officials very interested in seeing how this (warrant article) turned out. Cohasset can be very proud of the dramatic step taken today."

Despite the objections of local developers, town meeting approved the measure which will require sprinkler systems in all newly-constructed homes. The cost of the systems, according to the chief, is approximately one percent of the construction value.

The system installed during construction, and the diameter size of the piping will depend on the size of the building.

Several studies of the residential systems indicate sprinklers react fast enough to limit the amount of toxic fumes from a fire. Dramatic incidents throughout the country indicate the sprinklers have saved lives and property, he stated.

Accidental release of the sprinklers occurs only once in 16 million systems, according to statistics. They are proven effective in extinguishing flames and fumes in the area of the fire's origin, Chief Brock added.

The new fire chief batted four for five, with one article indefinitely postponed. The only defeat for the fire department was a request for a new fire chief's cruiser. The $16,500 request was not recommended by the advisory committee, which suggested it be delayed for another year. Selectmen recommended approval of the expenditure.

A larger expense, $138,000 for a new pumper, was approved by the voters Saturday. The pumper would replace current equipment which was exposed to salt water during the 1978 blizzard and has continually rusted since that time. That pumper will be used as a spare once the new machine arrives, Chief Brock said.

The chief explained the pumper has been out of service for repairs three times this year, and a total of five months last year. The purchase of another pumper will transfer the old pumper to a reserve position, with a total of five within the department. That is a recommended total by a national fire inspection organization, the chief stated.

The new pumper would have the capacity to contain a large-diameter hose. This is a piece of apparatus town officials have recently discussed

The 366 voters who attended Saturday's edition of town meeting were in a generous mood, approving most of the requests placed before them.

The article regarding plans to renovate Milliken Field was postponed until an anticipated special town meeting in June. The citizens committee chairman Ken Ekberg told town meeting a Cambridge architectural firm is now designing plans for the renovations and repairs. The plans should be completed in time for a June special town meeting, he said.

The estimated figures for completion of the work should be prepared at that time, Ekberg said. The Capital Outlay Committee earlier suggested a rough estimate of the repairs could total $750,000.

The town's operating budget was approved at a total of $9,472,534 for fiscal 1987. That number includes an appropriation for a halftime police department secretary. Although selectmen recommended a fulltime clerk, advisory committee and voters decided to split the cost for a halftime person at $6645. The total operating budget for the town includes state aid and new construction.

That amount does not include appropriations for a fire department cruiser, which was defeated by town meeting. It did include $60,000 for the purchase of two school buses. That appropriation was approved, although the school committee originally requested the purchase of three vehicles.

Voters approved a $12,000 appropriation for a feasibility study of inner Little Harbor. A state grant will include about $3,000 of that total. Selectman Diane Sullivan explained this is the first step in eliminating the algae problem in Little Harbor. The state will study the situation and devise a plan. "The study will provide us with a future permanent solution," she explained. The study will encompass the inner Little Harbor area at Cat Damn.

A subsequent article was approved which appropriated $1,095 for the repair of the tide gates at Cat Damn. The gates are used, according to Highway Surveyor Harold Litchfield, to flush the stagnate water from the inner harbor while a backhoe is used to eliminate the algae from the area.

There is a possibility the gates will be left open next summer to see if the algae problem is further reduced by tidal action. "But for now we need to keep the gates in good repair so we can do the best job during the feasibility study," Sullivan said.

Voters appropriated $6,185 to complete repairs to the seat coverings and floor of the high school auditorium.

A $15,000 appropriation was approved for the purchase of an emergency portable generator to be used primarily at the Pond Street pumping station. Sewer Commissioner Ted Guild explained that the generator is needed at the high school in case the building is used as an emergency evacuation center as it was during Hurricane Gloria.

The sewer commission is looking to purchase a second hand machine which will cost less than the appropriation.

Voters approved $32,464 to seed two acres of the landfill. Health board chairman Michael Bliss said the landfill is expected to last another nine to ten years, "it depends on how much trash is generated," he stated.

Voters also approved, despite objections from the advisory committee, the purchase of a ten-foot snow fence for the landfill. The $4,500 purchase is intended to keep the trash confined to the landfill. Currently, the winds whips a lot of trash onto private property adjacent to the dump.

A proposal to hire an assistant assessor at town hall was indefinitely postponed by the government structure committee, although they still support the concept.

Voters unanimously approved $9,800 for the purchase of a senior shuttle bus. The local Rotary Club contributed almost $2,000 toward the purchase, according to Council on Aging member Gerard Keating. The present bus is driven by 39 volunteers and completed 3,500 free trips for senior citizens last year.

Chiropractic for HEALTH

by Dr. Kevin M. Neill, Chiropractic Physician

GETTING TO THE ROOT

When a patient experiences a nerve root problem, it is generally found that spinal nerves that pass through the vertebrae in the neck have become pinched and irritated. One may experience sharp pain shooting down the arm that is often triggered by turning the head. In addition, a tingling, weakness and numbness in the arms and hands may be experienced. A nerve root problem can be caused by a variety of joint and disc problems. They may include facet problems where vertebrae join, a ruptured disc or severe osteoarthritis. Left untreated, additional neck and nerve problems can develop. Chiropractic's goal in dealing with nerve root problems is to realign the vertebrae and, hence, relieve the pressure on the nerve roots.

Chiropractic, rather than deal with merely symptoms such as pain, strives to go directly to the source of the problem. By proven chiropractic techniques, these points of interference are focused upon and chiropractic applications introduced that will eliminate such points of difficulty allowing for normal body function to resume. For a happier and more comfortable tomorrow, come to the COHASSET CHIROPRACTIC OFFICE, 760 Chief Justice Cushing Hwy., Suite 12 today. Chiropractic care not only restores health, it also builds health. Tel. 383-1211, 1214.

HINT:

Sciatica is one of the most common, and certainly among the most painful, nerve problems.

Town Meeting approves Water Resources District

Despite an objection to allow statements by engineering consultants who prepared the study, town meeting unanimously approved the establishment of a water resource district.

Floyd Prescott of Old Pasture Road objected when watershed study committee chairman Jeffrie Bettinger requested the out-of-town consultants be allowed to make a presentation to the meeting.

"The precedent was set at the last town meeting," Prescott stated, "and since an expert was not allowed to speak at that meeting, as long as I am around I will feel this way."

Prescott was referring to the December special town meeting when residents refused to allow R. Murray Campbell of Old Pasture Road, an opponent of the Ward sewer plan and a non citizen, to speak to the meeting.

Despite the pleadings of Bettinger who asked that town meeting be allowed to "hear what your $20,000 bought," Prescott's sole objection denied that privilege.

Bettinger, whose study committee has reviewed the watershed district and its boundaries for the past two years, completed the presentation.

The water resource district, he said, is 4.6 miles and encompasses land in Scituate, Norwell and Hingham. It includes tributaries and two well fields in Elm Meadows and Sohier Street.

The zoning bylaw amendment approved by voters was developed to protect and preserve the town's water supply. The amendment was proposed by consultants from Camp, Dresser and McKee after a yearlong study. The zoning amendment was developed after a building moratorium district was rendered void by the attorney general's office following its approval at the December special town meeting.

The zoning change was approved, followed by a companion article prohibiting the storage of hazardous materials within the district.

The water resource district will not affect current zoning areas within the district, the lot sizes, nor the criteria for single-family homes. Current activities within the district will be allowed via the 'grandfather' statute.

A special permit from the zoning board of appeals will allow a resident to store more than 600 gallons of home heating oil and on-site sewage disposal greater than 15,000 gallons per day. On-site sewage disposal within 500 feet of tributaries of Lily Pond will be limited to 500 gallons per day, except by a special permit.

Businesses dealing with toxic or hazardous materials are prohibited, along with landfills and junkyards. Underground storage of hazardous materials is forbidden, along with above ground storage of toxic or hazardous materials in excess of 25 pounds or 55 gallons, except home heating oil.

The advisory committee, board of health and the League of Women Voters voiced support of the district.

The water commission and planning board added their approval of the district.

Beechwood Street resident Osborne Ingram asked whether the original Metcalf and Eddy engineering plan included the location of a sewer treatment plant within the district off Sohier Street. If the town decided to revert to the original plan, that would be a prohibited use within the resource he explained.

Bettinger noted if the town reverted to the Metcalf and Eddy central sewer plan, this bylaw could be amended. Or, he noted, it could be an aspect of the Metcalf and Eddy plan the town could ask to be changed.

Glenn Pratt of King Street suggested everytime there is a crisis, the town reacts with an amendment to the zoning bylaw. "I suggest we look at this in more detail with some long range zoning plan for the town," he stated.

Town Counsel Richard Henderson explained the zoning bylaw permits variances from the appeals board, but it is ' very difficult to obtain.'

Town Meeting action. . .

"You are not precluding a sewer treatment plant," he continued. "We have been trying since 1903 and are not doing very well. We have a lot of remedies. It does not foreclose the building of a plant by adopting this bylaw."

The proposal was adopted by a hand count of the voters.

Related article 40 was also adopted by town meeting.

That article is intended to protect and maintain the water supply by prohibiting new underground storage tanks. The Board of Health must also be notified of any routine commercial or municipal application of herbicides or pesticides within the water resource district.

There are town-wide provisions in the amended bylaw stating every underground storage tank must be registered with the board of health. The tanks must be tested for leaks at installation, in 10 years, 15 years, and every year after that. The average cost of an underground tank testing is $100, according to watershed study committee member William Baird.

"The two articles give the town a full protective method," Bettinger noted.

Fire Chief Daniel Brock wondered if the town bylaw was not a "duplication of effort" being made by the EPA in the registration of underground tanks. Under new regulations, the local fire chief will be responsible for testing and registering all underground storage tanks . "And I think the penalty (for leaking storage tanks) is a little timid. If I nail you, the fine can go up to $10,000. They'll (the board of health) only fine you $100," Brock stated.

Town Counsel Henderson noted if there is conflicting legislation between the state and town, in most cases, state law will prevail. But since the attorney general must review all municipal bylaw proposals, "the problem should be resolved before he approves it."

Some residents expressed concern about the need for more clerical assistance at the health board to test and register the tanks. But chairman Barbara Kern said the office staff is assured they can meet the demand.

Voters unanimously approved the bylaw by a voice vote.

for a reception in his honor.

Students from the Pre-chef II course at the school prepared an extravagent meal for Langmaid and his guests.

The center of attraction was a cake baked by the students, many of whom know Langmaid and are neighbors of the Beechwood Street resident. The cake was inscribed with a report card fashioned in the frosting. It was report card for Jack Langmaid. His grade was A plus.

The students prepared the menu and the meal, which included quiche, sliced ham, turkey and roast beef, macaroni and cheese, chicken in curried sauce, rice, broccoli, salad and cream puffs for dessert.

"The students have been working all week on this," home economics director Patricia Wunschel said as she served the food to admiring guests. "But they couldn't be here because most of the kids have afterschool jobs in restaurants.

"Most of the students who helped prepare the meal know Jack. They really worked hard on this."

It was obvious from the guests, that although uncomfortable in the limelight, Langmaid enjoyed this tribute shared by friends.

BUGS!

Whether you live in the inner-city, the suburbs or on a secluded farm, there is probably some type of small, leggy creature that sometimes makes your house its home. Whether they're termites, roaches, ants or spiders, it's a good idea to serve them with an eviction notice if you plan to put your home on the market.

Most standard sales agreements require property to be inspected and, if necessary, treated for termite infestation before settlement. It's a good idea to check for problems as soon as you sign a listing agreement so termites are not an issue of the sale. Other insects may not physically damage the house, but nevertheless reduce its chances of selling for top dollar. If a buyer is constantly pushing back spider webs touring your basement, he'll be a little distracted. A single roach tweeking its antennae at a prospect seriously undermines that person's ability to appreciate the attractive features of your home.

If stand-by home remedies (ionized boric acid is an old favorite) don't work, call in an exterminator as part of your pre-listing check list. It's money well spent.

Editorial

Saturday's the day

After all the work, the hype and the handshaking, it has come down to this. Saturday.

By Sunday, the posters will be shattered, the campaigns will be ended, and campaign workers will be asleep with exhaustion.

But everyone will agree that the annual election of 1986 was one to remember. It was the year that people decided to stop thinking about doing something, and did something. It was the year more than 30 candidates ran for public offices.

And hopefully, it will be year of a record-breaking turnout at the polls.

What a small gesture to make toward those who worked so hard, labored for weeks, and made a committment to serve our needs. Let's show our gratitude by casting our ballot.

There were not a lot of controversial issues discussed during this campaign. Candidates, although numerous, were not vengeful or vindictive. They were courteous, and more ambitious than issue-oriented.

That's not to say they wouldn't talk about issues. Rather, 1986 was a year when candidates listened to concerns rather than attempt to solve problems with predicted promises.

It was a good, clean campaign, as they say. Candidates were open, hopefully honest, and forthright. It was an enjoyable campaign in which the public got a good chance to see their candidates and listen to their views.

We hope everyone is familiar with the issues involved and has read what their candidates have to say. We hope you will enter town hall Saturday an informed voter, capable of making the best choice for your community.

To the candidates, we say thank you for conducting an interesting, knowledgeable campaign. It was an informative few weeks for the entire town. We appreciate the concern you have expressed for your town, and hope the interest will not decrease now that the election is near.

To the voters we say, get thee to a voting booth. It's so important that we stay involved in the issues, situations and problems confronting our town. It's vital we make a reasonable choice, and above all, cast our ballot.

When we look around at countries not so fortunate, we must realize how great this privilege of free elections is. Use that freedom with great pride on Saturday. Take a few minutes to walk into town hall. You'll walk away knowing you too have participated in keeping Cohasset a great place to live.

Just a note, if you have any last minute questions, or would like to see how the candidates compare, take a look at the League of Women Voter's candidate guide published in this week's Mariner. It's a convenient, comprehensive look at all the local candidates.

but backed out.

Priscilla said she felt good about her mother's running the race, but added, "I decided not to because two of my friends did it last year and one of them, Becky Golden, took and hour and five minutes. She said that the ambulance kept asking her if she wanted a ride.

"She said 'no'," Priscilla continued, "but then she said that the next day she couldn't walk very well."

Before the run Goff said, "Maybe if I get the bug again today after running and finishing, maybe you'll see me hitting the streets again."

"It feels great," she said moments after crossing the finish line. "I didn't make any record times out there, but I'm very pleased that I was able to finish."

"It was a little windy coming down North Main Street," she said. "It was blowing right in my face, but other than that, I'm home...I'm home and I'm in one piece."

Goof said she ran the race with Steve Golden and his 9-year-old daughter, Priscilla's friend Becky.

"She was in inspiration to me," Goff said. "I told myself 'If Becky can do it, so can I."

Goff said she has no ambition to run the Boston Marathon, but said "You'll see me out there this summer."

She vowed to be back next year, adding her sister and her daughter promised to join next year's race.

Treatment plant doesn't hurt town character

Letters

To the Editor:

At the Chamber of Commerce candidates night, April 2, a candidate for Planning Board stated that his experience in industrial real estate showed that sewers promote growth. What's that got to do with Cohasset? Except for the 3A business district, none of the sewered areas in any of the plans cover areas that are not already well developed. Perhaps the occasional lot which hasn't been built on, and which can't meet today's standards for percolation tests, might be rendered useable. But that's hardly growth that would despoil the town. And what's wrong with having adequate sewerage along 3A, instead of the current hodge-podge of failing systems?

The character and beauty of the town is not harmed by a treatment plant with well designed plantings to mask it, but the quality of the town would be greatly improved.

I've yet to hear a no-growth argument that isn't specious, superficial and inaccurate, insofar as it is applied against the construction of an adequate sewage collection and treatment system. Such nonsense as "the potential to pollute our beaches" must be compared with our current willingness to discharge into an enclosed harbor. Intelligent, cynical, self-serving elitism I can understand — but not opposition that achieves nothing positive for anybody, and has the negative effect of increasing the future cost of what eventually must be done.

Cohasset should note that our west coast equivalent, the beautiful and unspoiled town of Carmel, California, has had sewers and a sewage treatment plant for many years. Growth and character of the town are controlled by zoning and ordinances, and the sewage collection system is expanded as necessary to preserve the health and comfort of the residents. Much of the terrain is rock. The character of the town has been retained by a positive approach to zoning, rather than by a negative approach to services for abating pollution.

Anybody want to try a defensible argument, on these pages, to the effect that chintzy address to the sewage pollution problem is a good way of controlling growth? Explain why it beats zoning, while you are at it.

A special thank you from the Dooleys

To the Editor:

To those of you who have expressed so much, have been so generous to my wife and me during the past three years, I must take this opportunity to say thanks.

To our family, friends, business associates, other members of the community who have supported me in the past and wish me well in the future, and to those of you who made last Thursday evening such a successful and extremely happy event for my wife and me, we say a big "thank you."

We want to thank Mr. John Muncey, Mr. and Mrs. Glenn Pratt, Mr. and Mrs. Joe Hamilton, Mrs. Ruth Treanor, the "Easter Bunnies" (for their visit), and to all our friends for your efforts on our behalf to make the evening the success it was. We're extremely happy and wish to extend to all of you our heartfelt thanks for the "Cohasset Table." It will receive a special spot in our new home to remind us of an evening we will long remember.

I'd like to thank the workers of the Town Hall for their unexpected but delightful gift upon my parting with a warm and "special thank you."

I especially want to thank the call fire department members, not only for their thoughtfulness and sincere generosity to my wife and me during my tenure as "Chief" of Cohasset, but a very special thanks for the time, effort and thought they put into the beautiful wood carved plaque. It will receive a special place on the wall of my new office to serve as a reminder of the professionalism and dedication shown by its members to the fire service.

I'd also like to thank the people who sent cards, gifts and called so many times to check on my wife during her recent illness. Your thoughts and prayers meant a great deal to us.

My wife wishes to extend her thanks to a special group she calls the "Silent Volunteers" of Cohasset — F.I.S.H. — for their undying devotion to the cause of helping the citizens of the town. Without you she could not have done as well as she did.

To each and everyone of you we say THANK YOU!

Sincerely,
Chief and Mrs. Martin Dooley

Lincoln family roots go back to the 17th century

By David Wadsworth
Senior Curator, Cohasset Historical Society

The earliest English settlers of New England arrived here during the third and fourth decades of the 17th century. Within two generations their descendants began the dispersal of population which would continue until the Pacific Ocean was reached more than a century later. Second and third generation New Englanders were among the hardy breed of pioneers who opened the frontiers of a new nation.

Distinguished among those early New England families who took part in the move away from the old settlements bordering the Atlantic Ocean was one whose name still exists in the three towns of their earliest residency, and whose name is known to every American school student.

That family name is Lincoln, and the earliest American roots of the Lincoln family can be found in Cohasset, Hingham and Scituate. The illustrious descendant of the Lincolns was Abraham Lincoln, President of the United States. Among several Lincolns from England to emigrate to the new colonies in America was Samuel, of Hingham, England, who arrived at the settlement of Hingham in the Massachusetts Bay Colony during the year 1637.

Samuel Lincoln had been born August 24, 1622, and journeyed to the New World when he was a young man of barely 15. Samuel's parents were Edward and Bridget (Gilman) Lincoln, and the family name has been traced as far back as Robert Lincoln, born in the year 1496. Samuel's parents did not make the great voyage to the American colonies, but a number of the family are known to have arrived in New England before the middle of the 17th century.

Young Samuel, residing in the settlement at Hingham, was known as a "weaver" and "mariner" by occupation. He married Martha, daughter of the Reverend John and Sarah Lyford of Hingham. The Rev. Lyford, a clergyman of some early note in the early Pilgrim settlement at Plymouth, later settled in Hingham.

June 14, 1657, a son was born to Samuel and Martha Lincoln. The boy was named Mordecai. In later years, Mordecai Lincoln would become a blacksmith by trade, and was one of the owners of three early mills in the Cohasset and Scituate area. He married Sarah, daughter of Abraham and Sarah Jones of the settlement at Hull. Of Mordecai Lincoln's three mills, all built on the small stream called Bound Brook, one still exists, a few yards beyond the boundary of Cohasset and Scituate, over the brook which once powered its water wheel. Mordecai was one of the first industrialists of this area.

His mills variously ground corn, smelted low-grade "bog" iron ore for the making of tools and sawed timbers for the colonists' new homes. He also owned a house (still standing) in North Scituate, and built another near South Main Street in Cohasset. Of the five children of Mordecai and Sarah Lincoln, son Mordecai. Jr. was born upon April 24, 1686.

This is the mill located on Mordecai Lincoln Road in North Scituate.
(Eric Francis)

This son later moved from the Massachusetts Bay Colony to Monmouth County, New Jersey, then in about 1735 to Pennsylvania. While in New Jersey he married Hannah Salter, and their eldest child, John, was born in Monmouth. Mordecai Lincoln, Jr. died in Amity, Pennsylvania, and his will was proven in June of 1736. The son John became one of a group of neighbors who moved together to Rockingham County, Virginia. John Lincoln had five sons; Abraham, Isaac, Jacob, Thomas and John. It was the eldest son Abraham who would be the grandfather of the President who bore the family name. This early Abraham Lincoln married Mary Shipley of North Carolina. In about 1780 the Lincolns moved to Beargrass Fort, Kentucky. Of their five children, son Thomas, born about two years earlier, would become the father of the President.

During the spring of 1784, Abraham Lincoln was killed by a hostile Indian while planting his fields. The young son Thomas was rescued from near-capture by a shot from the rifle of his older brother Mordecai which felled the hostile Indian. Thomas Lincoln grew up in the care of near relatives, became a carpenter and cabinetmaker, and married Nancy Hanks. Their son Abraham was born upon February 12, 1809 near Hodgenville, Kentucky. In 1816 Thomas, Nancy and the seven-year-old Abraham moved from Kentucky to Indiana, settling on farmland at Pigeon Cove Farm in Spencer County. Nancy (Hanks) Lincoln died on October 5, 1818 and Thomas Lincoln soon married Sarah Bush Thomson of Elizabethtown, Kentucky. It was she who encouraged and taught the youthful Abraham to learn to read and write, for schooling in that frontier land was infrequent.

In March of 1830 the Lincoln family again moved, this time to rich farmland near the Sangamon River a few miles from Decatur, Illinois. Soon after this, the young Abraham Lincoln parted from his family to pursue the career which would lead him in years to come to the highest honor the new nation could bestow upon one of its sons, the Presidency of the United States.

Returning quickly to the President's Cohasset and Scituate ancestor Mordecai Lincoln; Mordecai's iron smelter and mill near the head of Bound Brook was located in the Beachwood area of Cohasset, at a site called Turtle Island, just off today's Mill Lane.

This and other two Lincoln mills were in operation before 1700. Mordecai's house on South Main Street, an early gambrel cottage, probably was built for his son Isaac. The cottage survived into the 20th century when it was destroyed by fire. Mordecai's brother Daniel resided in the Cohasset area, building a house in about 1682 near Little Harbor on the first road to Hingham. Daniel was a large landowner and became one of the earliest prominent residents of Cohasset. Descendants of the first Lincoln families can still be found living in Cohasset.

Thus it is that the three towns of Cohasset, Hingham and Scituate all can rightly claim to have a connection with President Abraham Lincoln through two of their earliest settlers, Samuel of Hingham and his son Mordecai of Cohasset and Scituate.

What do you think about N. Main St. housing?

A recent application to the Cohasset Appeals Board for a variance for the construction of 36 units of rental housing for the elderly, with 20 percent of the units subsidized for low and moderate income persons, was denied. The proposal now goes before the Cohasset Housing Authority and back to the Appeals Board for a comprehensive permit.

First sprinkler town in state . . .

for the protection of certain neighborhoods along hard-to-traverse private ways and roads.

The new pumper is expected to last 20 years, according to the chief.

Despite the capital outlay committee's advice to postpone the purchase for another year, voters approved the request. "If this money is spent," capital chairman Ned Tebbetts said, "it increases the likelihood that the large items in the June special town meeting or later, will have to be voted down or vote for a (Prop. 2 1/2) override."

When asked where the new pumper will be stored, Chief Brock explained it would remain in-station. But the two reserve pumpers would have to be stored outside. "It is my recommendation that any addition proposed for the fire station include space for the reserve pumpers," he added.

The department will likely auction off the two older pumpers which are currently stored outside in the rear of the fire department.

Town meeting also approved $25,000 for self-contained breathing apparatus for the fire department. The expenditure would replace the out-of-date equipment currently used by the firefighters. Although options such as upgrading the equipment were considered, Chief Brock said the current equipment is in need of many more repairs. He expected the new equipment will last ten years, and noted the apparatus was necessary for the safety of the firefighters. If someone was injured on-duty because of the faulty equipment, the town could be held liable. This occurred in many communities, he explained, and has resulted in large monetary settlements.

The advisory committee, capital outlay committee and selectmen recommended the purchase.

Another article proposed by the fire department and approved by town meeting is a requirement that all buildings and additions be equipped with smoke and heat detectors. Despite the objection of the wiring inspector who said there is too much to review before approving the proposal, town meeting passed the measure.

When things quiet down a bit at town meeting, the knitting needles get into action. It's a great way to pass the time between warrant articles. (Eric Francis)

Because Wigmore was not consulted on a previous fire-department sponsored article relating to the installation of fire alarm equipment in all commercial buildings, that article was postponed for the June meeting.

Chief Brock said the smoke and heat detector guidelines would be worked out in conjunction with the planning board. "We would like to offset the increase in the demand of the Cohasset Fire Department. This would help. We are looking to fighting small, not large fires in town," Chief Brock noted. "We are attempting to put the cost of the systems on the developer or builder. He will have the option of the system used. As your fire chief, I am responsible for switching from fire suppression to fire prevention."

Town meeting also approved a previous article calling for the installation of house numbers on all residences. Before the sale of any home, the structure must include an easily-recognizable number near the main entrance, not more than ten feet from the driveway. At the time of sale, the fire department will inspect the home for smoke detectors and the house number.

Town reaffirms opposition to new telephone area code

Both editions of town meeting began with the passage of resolutions honoring present and former town officials.

Prior to the start of Saturday's meeting, voters approved a resolution thanking Selectman Frank England and former Town Accountant William Signorelli for their service to the town.

Monday night's meeting began with a resolution in honor of retiring school committee member Jack Langmaid.

Another resolution began the start of Monday's meeting which requested that New England Telephone retain Cohasset and the South Shore in the 617 area code.

The resolution called for the "research for further methods which would allow Cohasset to remain in the domain of the 617 area code." The resolution is to be presented to the telephone company.

According to Selectman Clifford Mitman, through the efforts of the South Coalition and Sen. William Golden "it looks like we will stay in 617," but the resolution reaffirmed the town's opposition to a change.

Town meeting Monday night included a provision to procure the photographs of all veterans from World War II, Korea and Vietnam who were killed in action. The appropriation totaled $3,000. The photographs will be hung together on a rear wall inside the town hall auditorium.

A request was made by the recreation commission to include a budget for facility permits under the jurisdiction of the recreation department. The proposal was approved by residents. The department has been responsible for issuing the permits the past three years, but selectmen have controlled the budget. Commission member Richard Barrow requested town meeting amend the town bylaw so the department will not have to go before selectmen for a transfer every time they need money for the facility permit process.

Selectmen opposed the change, saying, "as long as it works well now, why change it?" The recreation commission argued that since the department is responsible for the procedure, they should have control over the budget.

Before voters decided on the matter, Max Pounder of Stockbridge Street proposed amendment to the bylaw, and requested the Sandy Beach parking lot remain open until 11 each night. Pounder said the town is fortunate to have a place where kids can gather together at night. "It's very important we recognize young people as a vital part of this community," he said.

Selectmen Chairman Frank England addresses the 366 voters at Saturday's town meeting.

Without debate, the amendment to the facility sticker bylaw was approved. Voters also supported Barrows' proposal to include the facility sticker budget under the recreation department.

In other action Monday night, a few warrant articles were indefinitely postponed including a request for the installation of a fire hydrant and construction of a water main into Newtonville Lane off Atlantic Avenue. The proposed appropriation totaled $53,000.

A proposed appropriation of water revenues to purchase a new computer system for the water department was also indefinitely postponed, along with the department's proposal to purchase by eminent domain 36 acres known as Lily Pond Estates.

According to Chairman Peter Pratt, the water commission is awaiting the results of an appraisal of the land. In the meantime, Pratt urged "all committees to move with a land bank proposal. We are behind the times."

The sewer commission's request for updating the wastewater treatment was postponed along with adoption of a modified wastewater treatment plan. Commissioner Guild said negotiations with the state are proceeding "well", and a modified plan should be prepared for a vote at a fall special town meeting.

Also postponed were articles requesting roof repairs to the water department plant and the purchase of a stamp machine and paper shredder for the selectmen's office.

Voters accepted a motion to indefinitely postpone a collective bargaining agreement with the police union. Personnel Committee Chairman Jan Daggert explained the town is scheduled to meet with police union representatives and the state two times this month. Contract negotiations have been continuing for the past 16 months, she noted.

Voters approved a $26,000 appropriation for the second portion of a connection to the Old Colony Library Network. The second portion of the appropriation is the the purchase of equipment. Installation of the computerized equipment will begin in the spring.

Cohasset High School sports report . . .

Boys' Tennis

The boy's tennis team opened its season by shutting out a weak Middleboro team, 5-0. Coach Ed Amaral was pleased with his team's performance and was happy to start out with such a decisive victory.

Rich Redick, Chris Ryan and Fred Wilshire as Cohasset's first, second and third singles players all played well. Doubles teams Derick Lacks and Dan Farwell, along with Steve Myers and Jason Marsac, also picked up impressive wins this first time out.

Thursday, the Skippers squeezed out a victory against one of their toughest opponents, Duxbury, 3-2. Amaral was especially impressed with this win and felt this match indicates that Cohasset will be a team to be feared all season long.

Rich Redick had a tough match but managed to come out on top, 7-6, 6-4. Fred Wilshire blew past his opponent, 6-1, 6-4. However, the most important victory came from Jason Marsac and Steve Myers, whose 4-6, 6-3, 6-2 put Cohasset on top for good and clinched yet another win for the Skippers.

Friday, the boys went unchallenged once again as they crushed Rockland, 5-0. Amaral was once again proud of his team's effort and expected nothing less.

Overall, Amaral has been pleased with Cohasset's progress and optimistic attitude. Amaral attributes his team's success thus far to its depth and hard work.

Monday, the boys face a challenging Hanover team. Tuesday, Cohasset travels to Sandwich, and Thursday the Skippers take a tough Scituate team.

Girls' Tennis

Wednesday, the girls opened with an impressive victory over Middleboro, 5-0. Coach Sue Dalrymple was pleased that her team was able to pull out this expected victory and was quick to point out that Cohasset only gave up a mere five games in five sets of tennis.

Thursday, the girls faced a talented Duxbury team and unfortunately lost 4-1. Dalrymple felt everybody on her team played well and explained the match was much closer than it seemed since the third singles player and first doubles team both split sets.

The next time the Skippers play Duxbury, Dalrymple believes her team will come out on top.

The second doubles team of Lee Sullivan and Karin Anglin had a great day and managed to pick up Cohasset's only win. Both Kerri Kirkendal and Carolyn O'Brien put in outstanding efforts but unfortunately came up short against some stiff competition.

This week the girls face Sandwich on Tuesday, East Bridgewater on Thursday, and Scituate on Friday.

Girls' Softball

The girls began their season last Wednesday with an unfortunate loss to Bourne, 16-15. Cohasset had a great day offensively, scoring 15 runs, but unfortunately the team's defense was not so great and they gave up 16.

However, the Skippers did show spirit and potential which indicated they should improve tremendously as the season progresses.

Offensively, Kristin Ellinger and Cindy Spooner both played well, knocking in several runs. Toni Cann, Margie Murphy and Debbie Hartley all turned in good efforts in defense.

After making a few changes in the field, Cohasset came back strong in its second game and clobbered Jeremiah Burke, 25-5.

Not only did the Skippers once again hit surprisingly well, but they also tightened up their defense and gave up only one run until the sixth inning.

Once again Kristin Ellinger and Cindy Spooner hit well for Cohasset. In fact, Kristin has yet to get out and has gone 11 for 11 at bat. Pitcher Debbie Hartley did an outstanding job on the mound and picked up the win for the Skippers.

This week marks the beginning of the girls' regular season as they face Sandwich Tuesday and travel to East Bridgewater Thursday.

Boys' Baseball

The boys began their season with a tough loss to Sacred Heart. The Skippers were down, 7-1, at the bottom of the seventh inning when Peter Sandblom and Jamie Roy both singled and were brought home by Todd Henry's triple. Glen Bernstein got a walk and was pushed to third when David Shultz's hit drove in Todd Henry. After David stole second and Mike Gentile got on base, Bobby Shultz hit a double which drove in Cohasset's last three runs. Unfortunately, the boys were unable to keep this rally going, and they lost, 7-6.

Coach Joe Bouchard was pleased with his team's first effort and was happy with the way they came back. Bouchard was also impressed with the hitting of Peter Sandblom who had three and Jamie Roy and Todd Henry who each picked up two.

Saturday morning the boys won their first of two games against Gorham High School of Maine, 6-5. Once again the Skippers were forced to come from behind in order to clinch the victory. Pitcher Sean Corkery lasted the entire game and picked up the victory for Cohasset.

Both Bobby Shultz and Peter Sandblom played well offensively each picking up five hits. Jamie Roy and Todd Fitzpatrick also had good games at bat as well.

In the afternoon, the boys looked even better and this time crushed Gorham, 10-6. Bouchard was pleased with everybody's performance in this game but singled out Bobby Shultz as having a tremendous game out in center, making two spectacular diving catches. The other outfielders David Shultz and Philip Mahoney also played well on defense.

Offensively, Todd Fitzpatrick led the Skippers with three hits, followed by Peter Sandblom and Philip Mahoney who each had two.

The boys are home all this week as they play Sandwich on Tuesday and East Bridgewater on Thursday.

Boys' Track

The boys' track team has been hard at work these past couple of weeks and is looking forward to a competitive season. Coach Jon Anderson was surprised at how small the group is this year but feels his team is dedicated and the talent is spread evenly throughout.

Seniors on the team include John Hall, Dan Camardo, Kevin Dunn, Floyd Hardwick, Geoff Christensen, Mike Grienier and Eric Wagner. All of these boys have impressed Anderson thus far and should be competitive in their respective events.

Other high school students on the team include Mark McManus, Peter Buckley, John Linsley, Kostas Roukanakis, Bryan Edwards, Mike Smith, Ian Smart, Ned Chase and Matt Buckley.

Girls' Track

The girls' track team is one of the youngest the school has ever seen, but that does not stop them from being enthusiastic about ths upcoming season. Coach Claire Brady has been happy with her team's progress and feels its talent reaches into every event.

The only junior on the team, Caitlin Staunton, has been doing a tremendous job thus far and will most likely dominate the 440 and 220.

Senior Anne O'Leary has been showing promise in the field events. Sophomores Liz O'Leary, Jen Coley, Laurel Collins, Sarah Hamilton, Colby Mantz and Julie Bowdoin have all been impressive in the preseason, along with freshman Nancy Riley.

The girls open their season on Wednesday when they take on Norwell. Norwell has always been traditionally strong and this year seems to be no expection, but Cohasset should hold its own.

Abutters listed on Housing Authority agenda

In an article published in last week's Mariner, it was stated that abutters to the N. Main Street elderly housing proposal were not listed on the Housing Authority's agenda.

Patricia Walsh of N. Main Street and Laura Doherty of Cedar Acres Lane both notified the authority the previous week of their intention to attend the meeting.

Housing developer Wayne Sawchuk was not notified of the meeting and did not attend.

League of Women Voters Guide. . .

All candidates running for office were requested to answer the following two questions. Their answers appear under their names.

1. What experience and/or special qualities do you have that would help you perform the duties of the office you seek?

2. What are the most significant problems and opportunities you see for this position during the next term of office?

SELECTMAN for three years. Vote for Two.

VITO J. CONTE
18 Hillside Drive

1. Employed 35 years with the U.S. Government—33 with the Geophysics Laboratory at Hanscom Field in Bedford.

Starting as a warehouseman, rising to foreman and presently Unit Chief, I have learned employee-management relations first hand. I have extensive experience working with budgets and contracts, and am the Hazardous Waste Monitor for the laboratories. In the daily operation of my department I deal with engineers, accountants, scientists and both governmental and civilian elements.

I have the ability to think things out, and to listen.

Within the next few months I will be retiring from the Government, and although I plan to take other employment, I will have the time needed to be available for this position.

2. Wastewater, hazardous waste, the private landfill, growth of the town and future availability of housing for the older and younger moderate income people. Also, I am concerned that all employees be treated fairly and would be available to them as well as to the public.

JAMES GALLAGHER
19 Short Street

1. Recreation Commission, 5 yrs.; Vice Chairman, 5 yrs.; Harbor Study, 2 yrs.; Cable Council, 2 yrs.; Garage Study Committee, 1 yr.; Cohasset Little League, 8 yrs.; Rotary Club Member; Cohasset High Graduate 1964; Coordinated many youth and adult programs; Cohasset resident, 26 yrs.; Master Tradesman, 23 yrs.; Mass Manpower Development; Training Program.

2. Land fills, better communication with Selectmen, water protection, better resident participation to town government, need of town garage.

STUDIES

Cohasset Harbor Master Plan, Garage Final Report, Facility Permits Rules & Regulations, Recreation Lands and Parks, Benjamin General Plan, Effects of Pollution, General Town Government, Proposition 2 1/2, Beechwood Playlot Development, Elm's Meadow Skating Area, Budgets, Pollution, Cohasset Dump, Telephone Area Code Change, Building Moratorium, better understanding with building development.

MARTHA GJESTEBY
Old Pasture Road

1. With my proven record of dedication to the Town of Cohasset, I seek your consideration for a three-year term for Selectman. I have lived in Cohasset for over 25 years and during that time I have served the town in many capacities. I was elected to both the planning board and to two terms on the school committee. I was appointed to the capital budget committee, and am currently the Metropolitan Area Planning Council representative, and a member of the Joint Regional Transporation committee.

Based on my experience and knowledge of town government, I believe I possess the qualities that are necessary for this position. In office, I would represent all of our citizens and deal with issues with a fair, even-handed approach. My experience in developing personnel politices as well as face-to-face union negotiations would be valuable to the town.

2. The board of selectmen faces many issues and problems during the next three years: the continuing refurbishing and/or construction of our municipal buildings; resolution of our solid waste and water problems; protection of our water supply; harbor usage—both fishing and recreational; improved public transportation; and the establishment of a long-range financial plan to facilitate orderly growth of the town. The opportunity exists for continuing to improve communications; and to review bylaws and regulations concerning the day-to-day service to meet the needs and express the desires of the citizens of our town. We must always beware of "crisis government," since the best decisions are made with open, logical, thoughtful input by all.

JOHN K. MCNABB JR.
53 Pond Street

1. I have served the town for the past three years as a member of the Town Government Structure committee, where I have been elected chairman for the past two years. On this committee, I have researched many areas of town government, including the town clerk's office, the assessors' office, the treasurer-collectors' office, town meeting, and the positions of executive secretary and town accountant.

Two years ago I was elected by the town to serve as a member of the board of trustees of the Paul Pratt Memorial Library. On this board I have gained experience in the operation of a town department, the budget process, personnel practices and serving the public.

I grew up in Cohasset, attended Cohasset Public Schools, graduating from Cohasset High School in 1974. I was elected as student representative to the school committee and as student council president. I graduated from Bowdoin College in 1978 with honors in psychology, and attended an advanced degree program at Boston College.

I am employed as Assistant Legislative Liaison at the Massachusetts Department of Environmental Quality Engineering, where I have worked for the passage of progressive environmental legislation.

2. I believe I can make a significant contribution to improving the effectiveness of our town government. My experience and qualifications will prepare me to serve the town as a selectman.

The selectmen must provide leadership. They must conduct an open process of government that involves all segments of the community, and that is in full compliance with the State Open Meeting Law. As a selectman, I would do more to insure the equitable treatment of our town employees, and to resolve the negotiations over the contract with our policemen, who have been working without a contract for almost two years.

I would do more to improve the management of town departments by calling for program plans, goals and objectives, and budget goals for town departments. The selectmen can operate the town government more effectively if they will move decisively to solve problems and to avoid, where possible, excessive legal costs.

CLIFF MITMAN
118 Beach Street

1. I have lived in Cohasset for 17 years, have served on the personnel committee and have been on the board of selectman for the last three years. Aside from being involved in boarddecisions, I have taken the time to keep abreast of the activities of other town board and committees to assure a proper perspective and overall directon for selectmen's decisions. I was chairman of the board from April 1984 through April 1985.

My degrees in economics and finance provide the tools for analysis and decision making. As a management consultant to a wide range of industrial, retail, financial utility and not-for-profit organizations, I have 22 years of experience identifying problems, developing solutions that work, and in implementing change. While I recognize the similarities, I am also sensitive to the differences between town government and business operations.

2. The major, ongoing problem facing Cohasset and every other town is how to keep a longer-term perspective while dealing with budgets and issues on a year-to-year basis.

Shortly, we will be at our budget limit under Prop. 2 1/2. This is inevitable, since our budget consists mainly of salaries which need to be increased 5% or 6% each year, and the total can only increase 2 1/2% per year (plus new construction). The time will be accelerated by proposed decreases in state and federal revenue sharing. We will need to decide if we want to override 2 1/2, or if we don't, what budget items need to be reduced.

Also, I want to carry forward projects and help resolve issues the board has dealt with over the last three years. Among these are:

— Sewer
— Solid waste disposal
— Upgrade in bond rating
— Police and Fire station, Town Hall & Town Garage construction
— Resolution of other pending litigation

SCHOOL COMMITTEE for three years. Vote for two.

CHRISTOPHER FORD
145 Border Street

1. Those aspects of my background which qualify me for the office of school committee include my:

EDUCATIONAL BACKGROUND: 1959 Cohasset High School Graduate, 1963 Bridgewater State College, BA Education and History, 1967 University of Hawaii, MA Educational curriculum, 1969 Michigan State University, Ph.D Comparative & International Education, 1969 University of Michigan, CIC Traveling Scholar, Education and Development.

EMPLOYMENT EXPERIENCE: 1963-1965 US Peace Corps Volunteer, North Borneo, Teacher, 1966-US Job Corps, Honolulu, Teacher and Administrator, 1969-1976 University of Guam, Associate Professor of Education, 1976-1980 US House of Representatives, Legislative Assistant, 1981-Present, Hallmark 100 Properties, President and Owner.

Personal: Married to Karen Ford, with three children in Cohasset schools; Jon (9), 4th Grade; Paul (12), 7th Grade; and Erica (15), 10th Grade.

2. The greatest challenge confronting the school committee in the coming years will be to maintain the high quality of our schools in the face of fiscal restraints imposed by Prop. 2 1/2.

I personally gave up the security of a salaried position in Washington, D.C. to return to Cohasset and go into business for myself so that my children could grow up in this town and go to Cohasset schools. Five years later I know that I made the right decision. The Cohasset schools are as good as I remember them to be and in many respects better. They are a major factor in making Cohasset a great place to live.

We cannot afford to see this quality compromised. Salaries to our best teachers must remain competitive. We must also maintain our outstanding traditions in the non-academic areas including music, arts and atheltics.

SCHOOL COMMITTEE
TANNA KASPEROWICZ
172 South Main Street

1. Since 1979 I have been involved as a communications consultant at all three Cohasset schools. With the assistance of teachers and parents, we have produced poetry books, newspapers, a 22-page program for the all-school musical and drama workshop, and a Deer Hill Library publication. Students throughout the system have developed a real interest in the reporting, writing and publication process. I like to think I have helped to nurture that interest and enthusiasm.

Because I have been successful in working with teachers, parents and students, I feel I will be successful in working with that elected group of parents who are the Cohasset School Committee.

I am self-employed. Since 1981 I have operated a technical and business writing service. On a contractual basis I have served as a writer/editorial assistant on two State Dept. of Education projects. My clients are national and regional publishers, businessmen and women, and individuals requiring resume assistance.

I am a former editor and reporter for weekly and daily newspapers, and have experience as an advertising copy chief.

The special qualities I offer the school committee are: the ability to be a self starter; a demonstrated interest in education through my volunteer projects; and the ability to define problems and take appropriate action.

2. The major problems will be less state aid, and the financial restrictions of Prop. 2 1/2. In spite of these problems, the school committee has the obligation to create educational opportunity by:

a. Addressing the very real problems which our smaller student population has already created.

b. Formulating an educational plan; the school committee's only publicly-announced plan is a ballot override of Prop. 2 1/2. The destiny of Cohasset Public Schools should not be decided by ballot.

c. Working with town officials in an effort to prioritize and come to an agreement on future education needs. Other communities have created "priority committees," comprised of advisors, selectmen and school officials who work in tandem to better serve the needs of the schools and the town.

TRUSTEE OF PAUL PRATT MEMORIAL LIBRARY, for three years. Vote for Three.

MICHELE BUCKLEY
247 Forest Avenue

1. I have more than 15 years of experience in diverse environments. With a degree in special education, I am qualified to teach special needs classes. With a certification in library science, I supervise library operations in the Hull Junior High School. I was a librarian at the Glastonbury Abbey. Before teaching, I worked at the John Hancock Life Insurance Company operating a terminal console. While at the Hancock, I completed several courses in computer programming. Additional teaching experiences include tutoring at the Worcester Community Action Council, Rutland Heights Hospital, and a Montessori school. I was a camp counselor at the Cardinal Cushing School for exceptional children. I hold a professional membership in the American Library Association. Other memberships include the International Oceanographic Foundation, Cerebral Palsy of the South Shore area, the Smithsonian Institute, and the South Shore Natural Science Center. As a professional librarian, I will give a different perspective to the various situations that arise.

2. The Paul Pratt Library has an excellent professional staff as well as an outstanding volunteer program. The children should continue to take advantage of the story hours and the summer reading program. Teenagers should be encouraged to volunteer as much as possible at the library. To make the library a focal point of the community, it should join the Old Colony Network. If Cohasset belongs to this network, the people will get prompt service and the staff will be able to work more efficiently. I would recommend that the professional and business subscriptions be expanded.

CYNTHIA JOHNSON WHEALLER

1. After receiving my B.A. from Wellesley College in 1972 and my M.L.S. from Simmons College in 1973, I worked for four years in the public library in Andover. I went to Northwestern for graduate work in English and received my M.A. in 1978. Since then I have worked two years at the Emmanuel College Library and have been reference librarian for the past two and a half years at Cary Memorial Library in Lexington. My seven years of experience in public libraries has been in towns with makeups similar to that of Cohasset. In addition to my duties as reference librarian, I am chairperson of one of our long-range planning committees composed of trustees and staff members. This has given me some insight into the type of work and thought required of library trustees.

2. The most immediate issue I see confronting the library is implementation of the plans for computerization and joining in a computer network with other libraries. No matter how well-planned the transition this is a complicated logistical process. Working in a library that is undergoing just such a conversion, I hope to add my experience to the plans that have already been made either to bring fresh ideas or spare possible mistakes.

LUCIA R. WOODS
231 Jerusalem Road

1. Having served as a trustee of the library for the past six years and also as a volunteer and a charter member of the Friends of the Library, I am aware of what a tremendous asset the town has. With a fine facility, a dedicated staff, and a loyal corps of volunteers, the library is able to be of service to all the citizens of Cohasset. I would like to continue to bring past experience and enthusiasm to this effort.

2. For several years the trustees have worked with our librarian, Dick Hayes, on plans to bring our library into the Old Colony Network, a consortium of libraries in neighboring towns with a central computer base. To implement these plans will be the major opportunity over the next two to three years and to be familiar with the background of this project should be of considerable help in solving problems which the trustees will face.

BOARD OF HEALTH, for three years. Vote for One.

SHARON BECKER
186 Main Street

1. For the last two years I have been a member of the Cohasset disposal Area Study Committee, and am presently chairman. As a member of the Cohasset League of Women Voters since 1969, I have acquired management skills as a member of the board of directors, and chairman of various studies. Currently, I am enrolled in a Master's program in environmental policy at Tufts University. Courses in environmental law and regulation have made me familiar with statutes such as the Subdivision Control Law, State Environmental Code regarding sewage disposal, solid waste disposal regulations, clean air & water acts, and regulations regarding odor, noise and other public nuisances with impacts. I have attended workshops in landfill issues, as well as the New England Environmental Conference at Tufts University for the last two years.

2. With ever increasing demands on our natural resources, it is important to consider long-term effects of actions, especially in regard to groundwater protection. A crisis situation exists at many landfills, calling for promotion of recycling and source reduction as an approach to dealing with solid waste. The Cohasset Disposal Area Study Committee will be working with the South Shore Coalition in order to find regional solutions to the solid waste problem. Opportunities exist for wise future planning in order to promote and protect public health and welfare. Attention to household and other hazardous wastes and opportunities for their safe disposal is most important.

BOARD OF HEALTH
MATTHEW E. SULLIVAN

a. Extensive public and private agency experience in community agency operations.

b. Professional education and training in social services, including a Master's degree from Boston University School of Social Work.

c. Knowledge of Federal, State and local government functions, especially in human services area.

d. Ability to work with people in difficult subjects.

2. The maintenance of the quality of life in the town to insure the safety and well-being of all.

PLANNING BOARD, for five years. Vote for One.

DANIEL C. COTTON
27 King Street

1. Completing 5-year term on Planning Board, Secretary, 3 years. Liaison - Water Resources Committee & South Shore coalition. Edited topographic and ancillary maps. Initiated and drafted zoning bylaw changes. Director, Mass. Federation of Planning Board.

During past 40 years in Cohasset. Member of Committee that drafted original zoning bylaw. Advisory Committee, 6 yrs.; Chairman, 2 yrs. School Committee. Town Hall Office Study Committee.

Professional Experience. Industrial Real Estate Broker, familiar with land use, zoning laws, and procedures in Eastern Massachusetts. Member of various timberland and conservation associations.

2. The board has become more and more concerned with drainage in a town with a large amount of ledge and intermittent wet areas. Impervious cover created by buildings and pavement not only increases runoff but reduces areas of absorption, and this calls for careful planning.

State mandated low and moderate income housing that allows a developer to bypass zoning regulations must be dealt with. We have a duty to provide housing for those in need. If we don't, it will be done for us.

The increase in traffic flow is another area we must address. All of these things require a closer working relationship between town boards than we have had or have required in the past. With that and a demonstration of interest on the part of the townspeople, we can continue to enjoy Cohasset for years to come.

DANE HAHN
44 Black Rock Road

1. In Cohasset, the school problems are brought about by budgeting limitations, declining enrollments and special interest groups. The ability of the present committee is suspect and has done more to perpetuate problems than solve them. I bring a working knowledge of the system, and a strong management and financial (especially budgeting) background to the position. As a parent with two children in the system (not all candidates have children in the system) I will demand the system produce graduates of substance: students with well-rounded college preparatory education, or for those not planning to go further in education, a well-rounded life arts degree.

I will vote, not for the parents, not for the administration, and not for the prior school committee's goals — I will vote for the needs of the students. As a professional communicator, I will push to have all school committee meetings on the cable TV, and to open lines of understanding with the selectmen and advisory boards as well as our town accountant (when we get one). Presently, the only communication channel is through the newspaper, and that has been sufficient for the present committee, in spite of the fact the advisory board and the school committee have been shooting at each other for weeks. We should understand we're all hoping for the same bottom line: the best education we can offer our own kids.

2. There are fences that need to be mended, and personnel decisions to be made. The committee handled the superintendent's accession very poorly. There has been no thought given to restructuring the administration, rather a simple husbandry of existing positions. Mr. Hart may (or may not be) the best man for the position of superintendent. But he was railroaded in by moonlight in spite of what his own feelings might have been. What a disservice to him personally not to have stood the test of an interview process and emerge as a clear choice. This happened one night in the absence of the chairman, and exhibits the need to inforce the sunshine laws, particularly because the chairman had sent a letter/proxy to make the vote unanimous. Obviously, this was a staged event, and that's not right. It then fostered a domino effect, such that lots of administrators could each take a step forward. This I am adverse to, and believe that if left unchecked will be a significant problem.

There are external problems, as well. Financing and acquiring grants should not be left to chance. Fleeting opportunities present themselves, and it requires professional members on this sort of committee to seize them. Local opportunities would include more parental involvement, and possibly a town-wide survey to determine additional initiatives.

DIANA DAVIS KORNET
29 Nichols Road

1. Seven years on our school committee is the most helpful experience in performing the duties of this office. I entered the job in 1979 with enthusiasm and the commitment of quality education which I still feel now, but with no more experience than being a former teacher, a concerned parent, and an active volunteer. I am still determined to consider every side of an issue, and to listen to any citizen of Cohasset who wishes to express an opinion. I am not reluctant to reconsider a vote, or change an attitude on an issue, when convinced it is appropriate. I have learned a great deal during my tenure on the committee from fellow committee members, administrators, and many teachers. This experience will be invaluable during the school system's transition to a new superintendent, providing stability and support while we work to provide the best education we can afford for our young people.

2. The most exciting opportunity for our system is the chance to have a new educational leader in our high school principal. Welcoming a new face has been a pleasure that has become increasingly rare over the past few years, as our staff has matured and the number of pupils to be taught has declined. When new ideas are combined with experienced teachers, the result can be revitalizing to the entire staff.

The most significant problem over the next five years is the estimated decrease in our high school population from over 650 to under 500, where it will level off. This decrease in students affects scheduling, sizes of classes, levels at which a subject may be taught, numbers of "Advanced Placement" and "General" courses which may be offered, and much more. How we address these issues and preserve an excellent education is my top priority.

PLANNING BOARD
MARK H. TRASK
55 Bancroft Road

1. Graduated from Cohasset High School, 1974; presently enrolled at Massasoit Community College, Fire Science Program. Employed by the Cohasset Fire Department as Captain and Fire Prevention Officer. Former member of Ambulance Study committee, Employee Insurance Advisory committee. Frequent participant at meetings of the planning board and the zoning board of appeals.

The experience I have gained as a member of the Cohasset Fire Department, as an officer of the department and as Fire Prevention Officer is one of the special qualities I would be able to bring to the planning board. On a daily basis I work with plans and projects that come into the department. I've had experience working with development/building entities, insuring that the interests of the town are met relative to fire protection. Throughout my experience of growing up in the town and working for the town I have come face to face with many of the problems which must be more aggressively handled by the planning board. The flooded cellars and streets, narrow and often inpassable roadways, lack of hydrants in some areas, the vulnerability of our water supply, and the drought of affordable housing for those at the entry level all stand in mute testimony to the efforts which have been and must be improved.

2. A. Watersupply protection — must be in the forefront of every site review.

B. Affordable housing — a percentile should be included as part of an approval.

C. Drainage — because of Cohasset's topographical and geological makeup the drainage systems must be designed and executed such that water will have either no effect or even alleviate existing problems.

D. Site utilities — approvals for a site must be contingent upon the developer providing all utilities. New projects should not impact upon the town so far as the need for services is concerned.

I believe the Planning Board should seize the initiative to lead other town boards and committees in a unified program to address all of the above issues. Program planning in these areas can lead to the continuation of our enjoyment of the Town of Cohasset.

WATER COMMISSION, for three years. Vote for One.

RONALD GOODWIN
196 Pond Street

1. My experience as a businessman will help with administrative and fiscal responsibilities on the Water Commission. I have a sincere concern for the future of Cohasset.

2. A. Passage and tough enforcement of the proposed watershed area protection bylaw. Needed protection will require constant monitoring and compliance programs conducted by the water department.

B. Continued upgrading of the distribution system as recommended in the 1980 S.E.A. Water System Evaluation.

C. Work to continue to reduce the operating debt of the water dept. through sound fiscal management.

D. Protect the quality of our water against all odds.

ROBERT W. JACKSON
9 Ash Street

1. I am a 25-year resident of Cohasset and a 1966 graduate of Cohasset High School. I hold a B.A. degree in Political Science from the University of Virginia, and a B.S. degree in Law Enforcement from Northeastern University. As a member of the United States Navy, I served two combat tours in Vietnam, and am presently a drilling reservist assigned to Naval of Control of Shipping, Boston, holding the rank of Lieutenant Commander. My employment in the private sector includes positions as a manufacturing supervisor and as a security supervisor. I am currently employed by the Cohasset Police Department and hold the rank of sergeant. From 1980 to 1983 I served as an elected member of the Cohasset Water Commissioners. In 1983 I served as chairman of that board.

2. The most important issue facing the water department and the town as a whole is the protection of our drinking water supplies from contamination. Identified sources of contamination must be rendered harmless. If necessary, eminent domain proceedings, funded by a modified Land Bank Proposal, would be used to protect especially sensitive areas within the watershed.

Preventive maintenance of the water distribution system using federal and state aid is an area that continually needs to be addressed. Also, an acceleration of the meter replacement program couled with continued efficient management should insure that the water department operated with a surplus of revenues.

SEWER COMMISSION, for three years. Vote for One.

CHARLES DE SANTIS
260 Forest Avenue

1. I first moved to Cohasset as a child in 1946 and I have since shared with most all of you an awe and respect for Cohasset's delicate beauty and beloved New England charm. In 1982 I helped lead a movement to enlist the support of this community in a successful effort to stop a massive sewage project that would have ultimately consumed our fiscal resources and provided the vehicle for mindless urban sprawl and the self-destruction of this fragile jewel, Cohasset.

For the past three years I have been privileged to serve this community as sewer commission chairman. As such I have been ever vigilant in my efforts to insure that the former sewer project would not again be forced upon our unwilling town, and I have assisted in the community development of an alternative, affordable and environmentally acceptable waste-water disposal plan. I believe that I have the tenacity, energy, vision and the willingness to provide the leadership to complete this vital endeavor.

2. A. Finally allow us to see that light at the end of the tunnel by completing the Hull interconnection or if required, the upgrading of our own small facility.

B. The implementation of the Ward engineering on-site program for the areas, the vast majority of the town, outside of sewer service. The governor's newly-passed legislation will provide 70 percent grants for this project.

C. Termination of the Agreement of Judgement by completing A and B above.

D. Develop a rate structure for sewer service that is fair to the community and user.

ASSESSOR, for three years. Vote for One.

THOMAS S. DUGGAN
21 Ripley Road

1. I have been on the board of assessors since 4/1/85 and chairman since 8/1/85. I have experience in the appraising and real estate fields and am a Mass. Registered Real Estate Broker. I have received a Certificate of Achievement from the Mass. Dept. of Revenue for a course of studies in Assessment-Administration-Law-Procedure-Valuation.

2. Problems — to handle the state-mandated real estate revaluation efficiently and get the real property bills out on time.

Opportunity - to increase the revenue tax base and treat all property owners equitably.

RECREATION COMMISSION, for five years. Vote for One.

GERARD BUCKLEY
6 Hugh Strain Road

1. As a member of the Recreation commission for the past five years, I have become more familiar with the program set up by Jack Worley, the director of the recreation commission. These programs have been developed to meet the needs and interests of all the residents of Cohasset.

2. During the next term, the members of the recreation commission will strive to further develop programs and activities for the youth and the entire adult population. I encourage the residents of Cohasset to express their ideas for programs to the members of the commission, or Jack Worley.

Recreation Director's report. . .

From Director Jack Worley

During the past 10 years the Cohasset Recreation Department has conducted an Easter Egg Hunt the Saturday before Easter.

Each year the event becomes a little larger and more detailed. The Cohasset Police Association, Cohasset Rotary Club, George Mealy American Legion Post #118, and members of the Call Firemen's Association were the financial sponsors for the 1986 hunt.

During the past three years Mrs. Manuel (Jean) Salvador has not only contributed hours of time preparing, coordinating and participating in the Easter Egg Hunt, but has also organized visits to hospitalized residents, shut-ins and other members of the community.

The residents of Cohasset are in great debt to Mrs. Salvador for her selfless donation of efforts, time and thoughtfulness.

It takes a coordinated effort to conduct a program such as the Easter Egg Hunt. Many thanks go to the following people: Shirley and Ham Tewksbury, Jean Higgins, Richard Yocum, Joanie Higgins, Toonie Ross, Walter Ross, Peter Laugelle, June and Louie Simeone, Bob Beggan, Herb Williams, Dan Leahy, Richard Barrow, Terry Duggan, Jim Gallagher, Peter Trask, Manny Salvador, Bobby Barrow, Brenden Mulcahy, Polly Litchfield, Cohasset Colonial Pharmacy, Cohasset Woolworth's, Cohasset Medi Mart, Cohasset Stop and Shop, Red Balloon, Strawberry Parfait and Kimballs-By-The-Sea.

Also, thanks to Chiefs Joe Kealey and Dan Brock of the Police and Fire Departments, and Ken Ekberg, Principal of the Deer Hill School.

YOUTH JOB OPPORTUNITY

During the past few years the Recreation Department through its Job Opportunity Program, has placed approximately 90 Cohasset youth on part-time intermittent jobs.

In a continuing effort to place youths on jobs of all types, the department is asking any business or individuals who have a need for part-time workers to call the Recreation Office at 383-6791 to file their worker requests.

Once a job is filed with the department, the company will be given names of individuals who have applied for jobs that fall under the guidelines of your request. From these names the company may select an individual who will best suit a particular need. All compensation will be worked out between the employer and employee.

Cohasset youths seeking some form of part-time employment may also call the Recreation Office for a job application. Upon completion of the application the name will be placed on file as a candidate for possible job referral. In an effort to update the applicant files, any youth interested in working who may currently be on file, should re-apply by completing a new application form.

Peek at the Past

Help PSO redecorate lounge

The Osgood School Teachers Lounge has been in need of "sprucing up" for quite some time. The PSO has taken on this project, but needs your support. If you have any items such as a small sofa, loveseat, chairs, ottoman and any area rugs you would like to donate (these will be considered "charitable contributions") Call Linda Keller at 383-6873.

Art and music collaboration

April 15 at 7:30 in the evening, the Music and Art Departments of Cohasset High School will present "An Evening of Art and Music." This multi-media event will include slides of students work as well as music performed by students. Over 90 students are involved. Put that date on your calendar and don't miss this unusual event at the CHS auditorium.

DAR award winners

Three Cohasset Junior-Senior High School students recently received awards on an essay contest sponsored by the National Daughters of the American Revolution.

The history-awareness contest saw 8th graders Suzzunne D'Cruz win a silver award medal, Alida Dean, a bronze award medal and Patrick Conroy, a certificate award.

The three Cohasset students received their awards through the auspices of the Masssachusetts Chapter of the DAR. The awards were presented recently by Mrs. Dorothy B. Bates, the registrar for the Colonel Thomas Lothrop Chapter of the DAR in Cohasset.

Faculty members who worked on the project were John Raccuia, the social studies teacher of the three award winners, and Edward F. Sheehan, chairman of the school's Social Studies Department.

The winning essays were all on important American patriots who were instrumental in writing our constitution.

Science museum field trip

Mrs. Tewksbury's and Mrs. Clark's second graders went on a field trip last Thursday, March 27 to the Museum of Science.

They visited the Planetarium and looked up at the stars, moon, sun and planets. They even had a glimpse of Halley's comet!

Jump into the basket at Deer Hill

At the Deer Hill School, the gym is the most active place. We do all kinds of things. The past two weeks we were doing indoor soccer. We've already done: soccer, basketball, field hockey and street hockey. It's really fun. Gym is the best part of school. It's much better than math and reading because you're allowed to talk. Our gym teacher's name is Mr. Kuntz. He's real nice and funny sometimes. I've had a great year in gym.

Support the Deer Hill band

Be sure to hear the Deer Hill School band. We practice hard to give you the best sounding band ever.

At times we lose the beat but we can catch right back on. Be sure to be at the spring concert too, for two great bands and choruses.

The chorus is directed by Mr. MacInnis. The bands are directed by Mrs. Dalbeck.

So you should get your ears ready for the music and singing. The choruses practice once a week too. The music is grand so get ready for the choruses and bands!

ONE CUT ABOVE THE REST

Senior Center report. . .

There's a new group of athletes in Massachusetts. They are all over 60 and have pledged to "Keep Moving."

"Keep Moving" is a statewide network of Walking Clubs and the Annual Governors' Cup. Designed by the Executive Office Of Elder Affairs to promote exercise, fitness and socialization, the "Keep Moving," program was launched a year ago by Gov. Michael S. Dukakis and Elder Affairs Secretary Richard H. Rowland.

"Daily walks can lead elders to better health and greater independence, said Dukakis. "And with our seniors in the lead, working towards better health is something we can all take part in."

"Over 3,000 elders have enrolled in community based walking clubs throughout the Commonwealth and the membership roster increases weekly. We are excited and encouraged by the successes of this program," said Elder Affairs Secretary Rowland. "Walking with friends in their communities, 'Keep Moving' club members are enjoying the exercise and the camaraderie."

Working through a network of 337 Councils on Aging, senior centers, park and recreation departments, community centers and "Ys," volunteers are trained to organize and run the community-based walking clubs.

Registered club members receive "Keep Moving" membership certificates, walking manuals and passbooks and are encouraged to make personal and group part of their lifestyle.

Walking club activities include walks, historic walks, beach walks, parks, and community walks. On rainy or cold days there is always mall walking.

Take the First Step: For more information about the "Keep Moving"' in Cohasset contact Kathy Bryanton at 383-9112. Sign-up days will be Mondays at the Senior Center.

Special Events

Monday, April 7, 14 and 28: Keep Moving walking club organizational meeting will be held Monday, April 7, 14 and 28 at 1 p.m. at the center. Plan to come in and sign up.

Wednesday, May 14: Financial Planning Seminar. Ms. Suzan Killilea will present a special informal program on financial planning on Wednesday, May 14 at 11:30 a.m. at the center. Suzan will be discussing retirement planning, and basic investment concepts, along with today's banking systmes. Plan on joining us for this informative program. If you want to bring a brown bag lunch, we will be serving tea and coffee.

Thursday, April 10: World Health Day, Ms. Mary Ann Hensen, public health nurse, will hold a free blood pressure clinic at 11:30 a.m. at the Senior Center. If you have any health concerns or questions starting a new health program, please come in and talk to Mary Ann.

Thursday, April 22: Patriot's Day. The Patriots Day celebration at the First Parish House. If you are an old patriot at heart come in and "you shall hear of the ride of Paul Revere." The lunch is prepared by the Cohasset High School, cost is $1.40. Reservations are made by calling 383-1100.

Thursday, April 24: Book Review. This is a wonderful opportunity to be a part of the book review group. Mr. Richard Shines, Hingham Book Store, will be leading the discussion on Regional History. You'll love this program. Don't forget, April 24, at 1 p.m.

Tuesday, April 22 and 29: Ms. Nancy Clapp will be conducting a new and interesting class in stenciling. This class is just for seniors who are interested in learning the art of stenciling. The seating is limited to 10 people so call now. The cost is $6 for two classes.

Capital budget report

The Capital Budget Committee summarized the capital requests for fiscal year 1987 and the following two years. The requests currently proposed by the town for the next three years total $4,500,000.

"If we do not either deny or delay action on about $2,000,000 of these capital requests, we must be prepared, within a year or two, to override Proposition 2 1/2," the committee members stated in a report issued to town meeting.

Among the capital requests expected to be made in the next three years are: sewage tie-in with Hull, $800,000 to $1,100,000; rebuilding Milliken field, at least $750,000; renovations to the police and fire station, $400,000 to $500,000; addition and repairs to town hall, $400,000 to $500,000; rebuilding leaky walls at jr./sr. high school, $250,000; new transfer station at dump, $250,000; and renovation of the Sullivan gym at the high school.

In the report, the capital outlay committee stated that Executive Secretary Don Andrew estimated the town could issue about $2 million of new debt during the next two or three years and still not need to override Prop. 2 1/2. "A small portion of the $4,500,000 could be currently financed without any bond issues. However, if we do not either deny or delay action on about $2 million of these capital requests, we must be prepared, within a year or two, to override Prop. 2 1/2," the members stated.

Pastor Daniel Brodeur says his church has a sincere desire to meet the needs of the total person: spiritual, emotional, physical and social. Members of the Cohasset Baptist Church believe a personal relationship to Jesus Christ really is possible for today. Each service of the revival will emphasize how people can have this personal relationship.

The Cohasset Baptist Church is a new congregation in Cohasset that has been meeting in the Cohasset Town Hall Sunday mornings at 10:30 for worship and at 9:30 for bible classes for all ages. This church welcomes all who wish to worship with us.

People who get to know us find the strength of our faith interesting and helpful to the uncertainty of modern times," says Pastor Brodeur. "We seek to share these convictions with others who desire to listen. That's why we exist, and why we are sponsoring the services in April."

A place where kids can have fun

By Don Merrill
Mariner Staff

Gym Dandy for children ages three months to four years is not a daycare center or any other type of babysitting service.

Located at Church Hill United Methodist Church, the program is primarily a place where babies and young children go to have fun. As they do, they learn better motor skills as they crawl, climb, step and tumble on equipment scattered throughout the wood-paneled auditorium.

Children attend one, and sometimes two, 45-minute sessions a week, according to Gym Dandy founder Mary Foley of Cohasset. Sessions last ten weeks, and the program is not subject to the seasons like many other recreational activities for youngsters, she said.

In an interview Friday, the Cohasset resident indicated that today's highly-mobile society created a need for the program — a gathering spot for all the preschoolers and mothers to talk and play.

"When we grew up, we played with the kids in the neighborhood. It's not the same today, though," Foley said. "The neighborhood changes too fast. This becomes the 'neighborhood' for little kids."

Even though sessions are held in a good-sized auditorium in the church school, each is limited to 15 children because of the amount of equipment: ladder bridges, foam-rubber climbing blocks and "pyramids" and cloth tunnels.

One or both parents attend the session with their child, and that means up to 30 people at each session. Any more children would make the room seem crowded and might add to the chances of an injury, she said.

With less than 10 children, the room seems larger and the equipment can "overwhelm" them, she said.

There are no lessons to speak of, only simple rhymes and the ABCs. "We're not out to produce superbabies here," she said. "The main point is so the kids have some fun."

Mothers are the ones who come with the children during Tuesday and Friday sessions, and Foley noted that many of them work part-time on the other days. On Saturday, however, many more fathers bring the kids, and occasionaly both parents attend.

Sessions of 45 minutes are optimal for young children, she said, because it's long enough for them to play and learn while not so long that they become tired.

"With longer periods, they get tired and they pay less attention, and that's when they start tripping over each other."

The Gym Dandy concept is adapted from a franchise called Gymboree, Foley said. She organized the business while her sister, a teacher with a degree in early childhood education, assisted with curriculum development.

The program is the first of its kind on the South Shore and one of only a handful in Massachusetts, she said.

Curriculum may be too strong a word, she said, because it is simply a program of objectives at Gym Dandy and not something children are forced to follow.

The first sessions were held last September. Current classes began in January and are attended by about 125 children in three age groups: three to 15 months, 15 months to about three years (toddlers and tumblers) and preschoolers ages three and four.

Foley said she was surprised at not having to apply to various town and state agencies — and comply with regulations — as she organized Gym Dandy. She contacted the state Office for Children and was told that, since parents supervise their children in the program, it is not a daycare center and does not fall under the office's jurisdiction.

Like operators of daycare centers, however, Foley did have some problems with liability-insurance coverage. Medical and fire/theft coverages were not difficult to obtain for Gym Dandy, but a misunderstanding about liability coverage left her without insurance in the program's first month.

"That was just about the time that daycare centers, bars, restaurants and doctors were finding out their liability premiums were going through the roof this year," she said.

Her original insurance company had agreed to provide liability coverage and had accepted Gym Dandy's first payment. Foley said the company was going to send her the policy by mail, but it never arrived.

She discovered in November that the company decided not to cover Gym Dandy. "I had no liability for September, as it turned out."

Vermont Mutual Insurance Co. agreed to provide coverage after Foley resumed the search for insurance.

The insurance situation "is squeezing out the smaller daycare operators," Foley said. "They can't afford it."

That's not as much of a problem with Gym Dandy; the presence of a parent greatly reduces the chances of liability.

Cliff Mitman

(This article was submitted to the Mariner in time for the April 3 issue, but was not published. To compensate for the oversight we are allowing this article to be the exception for publication the week prior to electons. Ed.)

Cliff Mitman, a candidate for re-election to the Board of Selectmen, is emphasizing his experience on the Board for the last three years. During his first term, and especially during the year he was Chairman of the Board of Selectmen, he has encouraged open, reasoned discussion, has assured that decisions were made that were unaffected by special interests, and has helped to improve communications between Selectmen and other board and committees. "I feel the Board has been more effective with five members over the last three years," Mitman said, "but a lot remains to be done, and I believe I can provide continuity in dealing with the many major issues facing the town." Mitman groups these major issues into four categories: planning, projects, people, and last, but not least, payment.

In the planning area, Cohasset has not looked ahead in a reasoned, orderly fashion since the so-called "Benjamin Report" was done over 20 years ago. Mitman believes that it's now time to do this again to provide a framework for our future and to take any appropriate action that may be needed to update bylaws and town government structure, and to coordinate all boards and committees to assure that we shape future growth, town government and services in the best interests of our residents.

The second area is projects: Mitman points to waste disposal issues involving sewage and solid waste, plus maintenance and upgrading of town facilities, and protection of our water supply. Hopefully, we are approaching a solution to our sewage treatment problems. As a Selectman, Mitman has been involved in the ongoing litigation and negotiation in this area and has personally attended all major meetings with State and Federal agencies that will need to be satisfied for us to proceed. It appears the resolution of this problem will involve a Hull connecton. Mitman feels it is important to assure that we reach a cost-effective solution, and that we make sure that we service and manage sewage treatment in all parts of the town that have treatment problems. We also need to proceed with our ongoing investigation of Cohasset's participation in a regional solution to handling solid waste, and must take the steps necessary to prevent pollution of Lily Pond.

The other major projects that Mitman believes need to be handled with continuity are the overdue rehabilitation of the Police and Fire Station and the upgrading of Town Hall.

In the people area, Mitman was instrumental in encouraging the current personnel study on non-union pay levels and personnel bylaws. He has a business background in personnel consulting, and during his terms on the Personnel Committee and on the Board of Seelctmen, Mitman has always felt that it is important to treat town employees equitably and fairly. This is and will continue to be true for all non-union and union employees, within budget limits, and considering pay levels for comparable jobs in other communities. Finally, there is the issue of payment. Cohasset has fortunately been able to operate within the limits of Proposition 2 1/2 until now. Our latest budget includes a projection of capital needs of over $3 million for the next three years; also, town operating budgets continue to increase by more than 2 1/2 percent each year, primarily because of needed employee pay increases.

In addition, Federal Revenue sharing is decreasing, and the state, at this point, is not willing to use its surplus to replace all of the more than $80,000 Cohasset could lose. The combination of these factors means we need to be even more judicious about how we spend our money, or we must consider overriding 2 1/2.

Ghostly Comedy

The Cohasset Dramatic Club will present "Gramercy Ghost," a romantic comedy by John Cecil Holm, at Cohasset Town Hall, Friday and Saturday, May 16 and 17, at 8 p.m., and Sunday, May 18, at 2 p.m.

The heroine, Nancy Willard, is an editor in a New York publishing house, and is engaged to marry a stuffy stockbroker. Her landlady dies suddenly and wills her a ghost. He is a Revolutionary War soldier, doomed to haunt the Gramercy Park town house because he forgot his duty while dallying with a barmaid, and was slain by Redcoats on the spot.

Only Nancy can see and hear the spectre, which causes her fiance to suspect that she is unhinged. But a young journalist, seeking a story about the deceased landlady, believes her story.

Soon Nancy has three males in love with her: the stockbroker, the reporter, and the ghost. This creates a number of comic situations, as her fiance tries to have Nancy committed, and the reporter, with some supernatural help, tries to exorcise the spirit.

"Gramercy Ghost" will be directed by Brewster Pattyson, whose extensive directing experience includes both comedy — "Where's Charlie" and "Lovers and Other Strangers" — and the supernatural — "Dracula" and "Bell, Book, and Candle."

Senior citizens are invited to attend the performance Sunday, May 18, at no charge. Tickets are available at Fleming's, in Cohasset Village.

Amateur gardeners

The annual election of officers will be held at the April 15 meeting of the Amateur Gardeners of Cohasset. The meeting will be at 1 p.m. at the home of Dot Ahearn, with Helen Goodwin assisting as co-hostess.

The program will be a slide presentation by American Field Service student Carine Montiaux from Namur, Belgium, currently attending Cohasset High School.

All performances will take place by the mall's fountain.

Fingerprinting times are Friday, April 11, 5 to 8 p.m., Saturday, April 12, 10 a.m. to 8 p.m. and Sunday, April 13, noon to 6 p.m. For more information on events and safety features of the show, please contact Darryln Searle at 826-7386.

Cancer Crusade

Cohasset 1986 Cancer Crusaders are gearing up for a house-to-house campaign for the American Cancer Society the last week in April.

Last year, under the leadership of Regina Schultz, Cohasset's Crusade was cited for the best performance among the eight towns of the South Shore Unit of the Cancer Society. The campaign raised $2,950 for the best coverage achievement. Schultz is again heading the Crusade and is in the process of recruiting the team of captains who will assist the Crusaders in their effort to reach every household in town.

"This year's Crusade theme is 'Find Out What's Cooking'," Schultz explains, "and when one of our Crusaders knocks on your door during the last week in April, he or she will be distributing potentially life-saving information about how a healthy diet can lower your risk for developing several kinds of cancer and offering an opportunity to send for a recipe that incorporates these dietary recommendations."

Volunteers, she said, will distribute a pamphlet entitled "Eating to Live" to each neighbor they visit, outlining the American Cancer Society's recommendations for lowering the risk for many cancers, including breast, colon, prostate and uterine. The Crusade is considered as important for its educational value as it is for the funds it provides for the work of the Society.

To give their neighbors a way to put these guidelines into practice, the house-to-house Crusaders will also leave information on how they can send for a recipe that uses these healthy foods.

The Crusade received a big lift from Girl Scout Troop No. 4339 of Cohasset. Under the direction of Leaders Louise Smullen and Fran Lindgren, the girls assembled the envelope kits that each house-to-house caller will use in making their visits.

"We're very grateful for the work of these girls," Mrs. Schultz said. "In speaking with them I found that each of them knew someone who had had a brush with cancer, and we told them that when the Crusaders make their house calls the Girl Scouts can know that they participated in the project."

Rep. Murray appointments

Representative Mary Jeanette Murray (R) has been appointed by House Speaker George Keverian (D-Everett) to a special commission mandated to investigate the quality and effectiveness of care available to Children In Need of Services (CHINS).

The speaker also named the South Shore lawmaker to a second study: a Special Commission on Drug-Alcohol Patients incompassing de-tox, education and rehabilitation.

The CHINS commission will be handling one of the most complicated issues of the year.

'As a member of this Special Commission, Rep. Murray's assignment is to find out exactly why we are falling short and to recommend corrective legislative answers," Keverian said.

Rep. Murray said she was "very pleased" with the Speaker's appointment. "And I am also very gratified," Rep. Murray said. "You see, I was a member of the original CHINS study back in the late 1970's which formulated much of our present Child Abuse Law.

"It is an issue important to the people of my district and I'm pleased to have the opportunity to work for a major change and major improvement in the CHINS program."

Evening of art and music

Performances and artwork of over 90 junior/senior high school students will be presented at an Evening of Art and Music Tuesday, April 15 at 7:30 p.m. in the high school auditorium.

A multi-media collaboration between the music and art departments, under the direction of Steve Shirosky and Colleen Lucas, the program takes an historical approach to the two disciplines.

After studying art from pre-historic times up to the 20th century, students created artwork in the style of a certain period or produced their own original compositions as influenced by a period.

Music students matched music with the art periods and have prepared to perform accompaniment live on stage to a slide show of the artwork.

The result is an original overview of the history of art and music not to be missed.

Refreshments will follow the hour-long show in the artroom where students' original art for the slide show will be on display.

Art and literature sale

"Whispers and Shadows," a 30-page extravaganza of art and literature from grade 7 to 12 students, will be available for sale beginning April 14. Christensen named director of South Shore Coalition

By Don Merrill
Mariner Staff

Jean H. Christensen, a former member and chairman of the Marshfield Planning Board, was chosen last week by the South Shore Coalition to be the first executive director of the new 10-town council.

A planner with the Metropolitan Area Planning Council for nearly three years, Christensen, of 710 Union St., was chosen in a unanimous vote Thursday at a coalition meeting in Hanover.

State Sen. William B. Golden (D-Weymouth) said Christensen will remain an MAPC employee on assignment to the coalition. Details of salary and other employment terms are to be negotiated with the regional agency by a subcommittee of coalition members.

Christensen's salary will be paid from the $35,000 Incentive Aid grant given in February by the state to foster coalition activities.

Golden proposed hiring Christensen through MAPC because of her "initiative, drive and planning knowledge."

"Jean has been a driving force at MAPC for the coalition," he said. "She also knows the area well, and that's an important consideration in an effort like ours."

Christensen received her bachelor's degree in political science from the University of Pittsburgh and her master's degree in planning from the Massachusetts Institute of Technology. She served as member and chairman of Marshfield's planning board during the 1970s, Golden said.

The senator gave members two alternatives: hire Christensen now or publicly advertise for director candidates with planning experience, a process which could become lengthy.

The coalition is not required to spend the grant funds immediately but must earmark at least part of the $35,000 for some use before the fiscal year ends June 30.

Another problem with seeking non-MAPC candidates is the uncertainty of future grants from the state, Golden said.

"If (Christensen) works for us a year and something happens, she hasn't left her career track or her position at MAPC," he said. "We can't guarantee to an outside person that the grant will continue to be funded."

Hiring an executive director is part of Golden's plan to bind the coalition together as a true regional body. One of Christensen's first duties, he said, will be to organize a day-long seminar in the fall for local officials in the 10 towns.

Golden outlined the plan to coalition members before proposing Christensen as executive director. To prepare for the seminar, the director will compile information from the communities to form a "snapshot" of where the region stands on issues like planning, solid waste, water quality, housing and transportation.

"We want to find out how each town is planning for future growth," he said.

Once the information is compiled, a day-long session for members of local planning boards, school committees, conservation commissions, appeals boards and others. Golden said he plans to invite all local officials and to insist on good attendance.

The morning seminars would concentrate on the South Shore's broad-scale growth in the past five to 10 years, he said. In the afternoon, officials would attend seminars that pertain to their specific function.

Members of each board will gain an understanding of "law and regulations pertaining to them, the extent of their powers and an update on new regulations" in the seminars, which would be a first in the state, Golden said.

"It will be constructive to have all these people meet and work together, and it's an ongoing process. By doing so, the coalition will ensure that we in state government undertand what these towns need.

"The key to implementing all this is the person the coalition hires for its executive."

Armed with the new information, local officials will return to their towns with a clearer understanding of how their decisions affect the South Shore as a whole, Golden indicated.

"We're not saying that we're anti-growth on the South Shore, but we must begin to manage growth and do it intelligently."

The coalition designated Golden and members Kenneth Moll of Hingham and Selectman Gerald Dwight of Scituate to negotiate Christensen's work agreement with MAPC Executive Director Alex Zaleski.

Before accepting the new executive director, members said they want Christensen to work full time in coalition activities. Golden said there had been discussion of a three-day position at MAPC, but he added that the group could insist on a full-time director in negotiating the contract.

Railroad Citizens Advisory panel to meet

The first meeting of the citizens' advisory panel on restoration of the Old Colony Railroad will be held at 7:30 p.m. Thursday, April 17 at Braintree Town Hall.

State Sen. William B. Golden (D-Weymouth) told South Shore Coalition members last week that information on the progress of preliminary studies on the restoration of South Shore commuter rail will be available at the meeting.

At present, he said, the push for restoration has hit a snag that could be resolved with a state Environmental Impact Statement that is now being conducted.

The federal government considers the Old Colony proposal to be a new project, not a restoration of previous service. The designation could result in a lengthy study of alternatives to rail transportation. Golden said that could delay plans by up to three years.

Completing a state EIS, which meets federal environmental standards, precludes the need for the federal alternatives study and will only take six to 12 months to complete, he said.

Students asked to design Coalition logo

Art students in 10 South Shore high schools will be invited to design a new letterhead for the South Shore Coalition in a contest this spring.

Scituate Selectman Gerald Dwight proposed the contest in a coalition meeting last Thursday. "It would be a great way to increase the coalition's visibility," he said. "It's got great publicity value."

State Sen. William B. Golden's staff will soon notify high-school principals in the 10 member towns of the contest. Members reminded Golden that entries should be sought from regional schools, such as South Shore Vocational-Technical High School, as well as muncipal schools.

The contest is to be open to all high school students and is likely to begin this spring, coalition members said.

Top four real estate pros join Hallmark

Four of the top producing real estate professionals on the South Shore have joined the Cohasset-based firm of Hallmark 100 Properties Ltd.

Mary Tibbetts, formerly with Gallery 360 in Scituate; Alna Ekberg and Barbara Froio, formerly with the Cohasset Division of Hunneman Company and Paula Meallo, formerly with the Chase Group, Hingham, have transferred to Hallmark 100.

New Hallmark realtors include: (clockwise, top to bottom) Alna Ekberg, Paula Meallo, Mary Tibetts, and Barbara Froio.

Mary Tibbetts, a Scituate resident, has been active in real estate sales on the South Shore for 30 years. A consistent million dollar producer, Mary was recently honored for completing $1.5 million in sales in January of this year alone. Mary is married to Dick Tibbetts, a Scituate builder, and is an expert in new construction and land development.

Alna Ekberg, a Cohasset resident, is a nine year real estate veteran and was honored in 1985 as one of the top overall producers in her former firm with $5 million in sales volume. Alna is married to Ken Ekberg, principal of the Deer Hill School in Cohasset, and has one daughter, Karen, a junior at Brown University.

Barbara Froio, of Cohasset, has nine years of experience as a real estate broker and manager and was honored in 1985 for producing $3.5 million in sales. Barbara and her husband Jim have five children and they are members of the Cohasset Golf Club and the Cohasset Boosters Club.

Paula Meallo, also of Cohasset, has been active in real estate sales since 1983 and has been responsible for one million in sales during the first three months of 1986. Paula and her husband Albert are both lifelong residents of Cohasset. Paula was the district manager for an international sales organization and is active in volunteer work with the Glastonbury Abbey in Hingham.

A place for fun. . .

The interaction between children is perhaps the most-interesting aspect of the job, she says. While some kids are reluctant to leave their parent's side at first, the presence of mom or dad becomes a source of confidence to the child as he or she begins socialization with others in the session.

"They're not getting left with a bunch of strangers here. Having mom here is comforting to them."

It's not unusual for the children to know each other by name after the second session, even among those who have just started to talk, Foley said.

Unpenned pooches pose problem for Cohasset

By John Magadieu
Mariner Staff

Is there a pooch problem in Cohasset?

Next time you travel through town, try to see if you can't spot a stray Fido, Bowser or Spot. It shouldn't be diffucult.

Dog officer Richard Yocum agreed, "There is a problem. There are a lot of dogs that are running loose.

"The problem," he said, "is that the town does not want to give me a budget big enough to control the problem.

"They give me an operating budget of just under $3,000 a year," he added.

Yocum explained he mainly handles complaint calls. "I don't go around picking up dogs," he said. "If I get a complaint, then I will go pick the dog up."

He explained he gets in the vicinity of 300 to 400 complaints per year. Most complaints, he said, regard dogs barking or defecating on people's lawns.

"Some people just don't want dogs on their property," he said, "so they give me a call saying, 'There's a dog roaming around my property. Can you come get it?' "

Yocum explained his job is to enforce the town bylaw, which states that dogs can't run on public or private property without permission from the owner.

"I have the right to pick up any dog that's not properly licensed as well," he added.

Yocum said he's presently using a private kennel in Cohasset for his business.

The cost for a captured canine, he said, runs the owner a kennel fee for boarding, plus a $10 impound fee, which goes back to the town.

"I don't bring 300 to 400 dogs to the kennel," he said, "because the kennel is usually filled and I have no place to put them."

Yocum estimated he incarcerates 50 to 100 offenders per year.

"In the last two months, I've gone out at two, three, four o'clock in the morning on barking dog complaints," he said. People have left their dogs out all night long."

He added, "People also leave their dog tied up to a run with nobody home and the dog barks for three or four hours. I've taken them off their runs and put them in the pound because of that."

Loose dogs are another problem.

"We've asked people to restrain their animals and that's good for about two or three weeks, and then the animal is right back out loose again," he explained.

Where is the canine cruising? Maybe he's on his way to your yard, as he walks across N. Main Street near Cohasset Common. (John Magadieu)

The dog officer said that in drastic cases, he would go to the Board of Selectmen and request that the dog be either removed from town or destroyed.

"I've had two or three cases over the years," he recalled, "where the dog has been ordered restrained, was restrained for a couple of months, then went loose again.

"This goes on for a period of six or eight months, until finally I go back and tell them to restrain the dog or have it removed from town."

Yocum reports that he has given three dogs one-way tickets.

He said when he first took the job six years ago, there was a big problem with packs of dogs attacking livestock.

"I think we're starting to get away from dogs running in packs for some reason," he said.

Still, the solution to Cohasset's dog dilemma might be expensive.

Yocum suggested, "What the town really needs is a full-time dog officer and an increased budget, but you're talking about going from a $5,000 department, including salary to a $35,000 or $40,000 department."

The answer gets costlier.

"Once you do that," Yocum explained, "you need a permanent kennel facility, which Cohasset doesn't have."

He added loose dogs will probably continue to hound Cohasset residents until such drastic measures are taken.

'Conway Country' Update

IT'S A BUSY SPRING IN 'CONWAY COUNTRY' . . .

- Sales associates staffed our booth at the South Shore Plaza for four days last week. It gave us a chance to see a lot of old friends and make some new acquaintances.
- Our relocation department is getting ready for the RELO Group national convention that will be held in Boston this July. Our John Reardon is convention chairman.
- Many of us attended a retirement party last week for Jane Eastman, formerly of Quincy and Hingham. Jane was instrumental in helping us set up our license school. She and her husband, Therald moved to the Cape two years ago where Jane ran our Cape division of the school while selling real estate through our Orleans office. Now, the Eastmans are selling their home and retiring to Maine.
- Cohasset Office continues to lead all Conway offices. Manager Muriel Desmond reported 13 sales in five days last week.
- Over 100 people attended a Home Buyers and Home Sellers Seminar held in Milton on March 26th. These are always popular events. More are planned by the Conway Company for the upcoming months. Perhaps your group would like us to put one on for you . . . let us know.
- Land has become a precious commodity. It's too early to give the details, but just this week we've heard of four land transactions within the company, all over $1 million.

Making matters understandable

PGG turns complex thoughts aside

By Jane Lane
Mariner Staff

To take a complex issue and convert it into meaningful, understandable terms is a difficult process.

Sometimes it requires the help of professionals who will absorb all the information, decipher it, and assimilate it into a comprehensive, clear manner.

That is why companies throughout the South Shore have turned to PGG Associates. Whether requesting assistance in new employee training methods or seeking a specialized seminar for management personnel, PGG Associates has answered their needs.

Jo-Ann Pilczak explained, "we are actually like reporters. We do a lot of interviewing with the technical people involved. We identify the situation correctly and we understand who the information is to be provided to. We rewrite the information so it will be understandable to the unitiated - the person with no experience in that matter."

Partner Jack Green continued, "we also build into our materials certain exercises which enables the new employee or trainee to learn and apply the material just learned. This information will allow him to know whether he can do the task on the job. That's the basis of our training materials.

"The technical person in the specific company teaches us," Green continued. "By questioning and analyzing what he says, we can convert that information into materials the unitiated can understand. We are a clearinghouse of information. Our objective is to teach the basis rules and practical aspects of how a certain on-the-job function is done."

Pilczak and Green formed PGG Associates a year and a half ago. Pilczak resides in Cohasset, and has an undergraduate degree in educational psychology and a graduate degree in school psychology. She was employed in industry for six years before deciding to step into self-employment.

Green of Duxbury has a graduate degree in audio visual communications and was a secondary school teacher. He later joined private industry and worked for the New England Telephone training center in Boston and other companies for more than ten years.

There are certainly other professional training consultants in the area, they note, but PGG Associates is the only firm which will seek out technical professionals to assist them in their task. The consultants, as the general contractors, use these professional experts as sub-contractors throughout their assignment. With the professional's help and guidance, PGG Associates can assimilate understandable, technical guidance for new employees or trainees.

In addition, utilizing Green's extensive audio-visual expertise, PGG Associates often provide not only a training manual, but visual aids such as video tape or a slide presentation. Booklets and print hand-outs are also part of the finished product.

One example of their work was recently provided to the National Fire Protection Association in Quincy. They were assigned the task of developing a life safety code seminar. The materials would be designed for building code officials, fire inspectors, government agencies, hospital inspectors and builders.

The assignment included a 700-800 slide presentation in addition to a manual for a four-day program.

Another recent task was provided to Factory Mutual Engineering of Norwood. The consultants were approached with a need to develop a training program for new employees. They were all college graduates, many with advanced technical degrees. The consultants were required to introduce the new personnel to the company and the background of the firm.

Pilzcak explained that a team was formed and a fire protection engineer was assigned to the consultants as a technical person. Working with the technical expert and the company team, PGG Consultants designed and wrote a complete training program.

Subjects they are involved in span a complete range of topics. First-time training programs are a specialty along with developing company brochures for college recruitments and job fairs.

"The subjects and topics are unlimited," Green stated. "Our approach is to determine the problem, and if training will solve that problem. Our objective is to identify the need for an employer, what has to be done, whether it is a life safety seminar, or a fire protection manual."

The only requirement for the consultants is the technical person within the company who can provide them with expert, accurate information.

In addition to their contract work, PGG Associates is now branching out into the development of training products which will be marketed nationally.

The consultants will identify a problem and develop a product to meet that need. Their first attempt at this is just now on the market. It is a training program for breastfeeding premature in-

"The greatest Irishman that ever lived"

The news of St. Patrick's Day contained, as it always does, paeans to the republican cause in Ireland. Typical of these was the March 17 unveiling by Boston Mayor Raymond Flynn at Doyle's Cafe in Jamaica Plain of a portrait of the late Irish revolutionary Michael Collins.

Doyle's is an establishment which, on the basis of the assiduous research I always conduct in your behalf, I can vouch is one of the most beautifully preserved (for it yet carries Pickwick Ale) working class pubs in America. On the occasion of the unveiling, Doyle's proprietor observed that Michael Collins was "the greatest Irishman that ever lived."

On that, and on little else about Ireland, the mayor of Boston and I would agree; for the implications of the life and death of Michael Collins are the opposite of what those who seek to rationalize Ireland's contemporary terrorist fringe believe. Herewith a bare but I hope instructive outline of the times of Michael Collins and the manner of his living and dying.

Born in 1890, Collins grew up steeped in the tradition of British contempt for the Irishman, for his country, his faith, his way of life, his native Gaelic, and even his lilting hiberno-English. Collins learned to be a revolutionary at a tender age, and his direction in life was probably certain by the turn of the century. He became an "adjutant" in the Irish Republican Army, and at 26 participated in the bloody Easter, 1916 uprising.

This rising had been carefully planned with the help of German agents so as to take Britain, then in the midst of World War I, by surprise. But it was successfully suppressed, and the top leaders with the exception of Eamon De Valera were executed —he spared by dint of being American-born. Those not executed were imprisoned for two years, briefly amnestied, then rearrested for continuing subversion. Britain then stupidly instituted the draft in Ireland for the World War with the result that they should have expected: mass desertions.

In the wake of these events, elections to the British Parliament were held in 1918. (All Ireland then participated in Parliamentary elections.) In the south of Ireland the republicans under the Sinn Fein banner prevailed overwhelmingly. The elected refused to take either the prescribed oath to the King or their seats in Parliament, and instead met in Dublin as republicans and elected De Valera president. This "Dail" (or assembly) was suppressed and De Valera went to prison yet another time.

Collins signed the agreement with the remark that what he was signing was probably his death warrant. Churchill observed, with his typical generosity after a fight that 'Ireland is not a daughter state. She is a parent nation.'

Enter then Michael Collins to history. In February, 1919, Collins staged a daring rescue at Lincoln Jail where De Valera was being held. He successfully freed De Valera, disguised him, and smuggled him to New York where De Valera embarked on a fundraising effort that raised over five million 1919 dollars. For the Lincoln escapade the British, under Colonial Secretary Winston Churchill, put a five thousand pound price on Collins' head.

With the complete suppression of the Dail in August, 1919, civil order in Ireland collapsed completely. British constables started to be murdered at a rate of several a week, hunger strikers commenced to perish, and plans were hatched to kidnap Churchill and other British cabinet members.

Although respecting the Irish as many Britons did not, Churchill believed there could be no political solution without first reestablishing order. By early 1920 the Royal Irish Constabulary (i.e. the police) was impotent before the crisis, and the British Army that had fought in France was largely demobilized and dispersed. If any "force" could have regained the upper hand for the British at that juncture, which it could not have, none was available.

Churchill therefore made one of the great blunders of his public life — far greater than the forcing of the Dardanelles or the battle for Antwerp, World War I initiatives which today are inaccurately remembered as great Churchillian errors. Churchill's blunder, as Colonial Secretary, was to propose the creation of a "Special Emergency Gendarmerie" to be recruited from discharged war veterans and sent to Ireland to reestablsh the rule of British law.

In our lexicon it would be like sending Viet Nam veterans suffering from post traumatic stress syndrome into Roxbury to put down a riot. Most of the shell-shocked veterans who volunteered for the Gendarmerie were unemployed, and many were emotionally broken by their years in the trenches in France. These troubled individuals were issued surplus khaki uniforms and black belts, and were thrown into the Irish abyss. By their belts and uniforms they came to be known as the "Black and Tans," a term that no respectable Irish-American need have defined. Their atrocities in Ireland were manifold, and climaxed on December 11, 1920 when they burnt the city of Cork.

At that point (on December 23) the British Parliament reluctantly voted limited self-government in the south, which the north wanted no part of, and separation of the north from the south, which the south wanted no part of. Into the quarrel stepped the King of England, George V, who passionately appealed for an end to fratricidal strife, an appeal that by the burden of tradition left the Prime Minister Lloyd George no choice but to send a missive to De Valera proposing negotiations.

Ever uncompromising to the smallest symbol, De Valera responded that as a "chief of state" he could not meet as an equal with a mere prime minister. Therefore the killing went on for several more months before the Irish people prevailed on De Valera to agree to send the founder of the Sinn Fein Arthur Griffith and the by now notorious Collins to London to negotiate with British representatives, the most prominent of whom was Winston Churchill.

When Collins and Churchill met for the first time the hatreds were a veritable fabric. Churchill had put a price on Collins' head, Collins had tried to kidnap Churchill during a Scottish vacation. Yet the two had more in common than they had in enmity. Each was fiercely passionate, patriotic, combative, stubborn, overweight, brilliant, and funny. With the help of Clementine, Churchill came to understand that had he been born Irish he would have behaved as Collins had behaved. When Collins complained about the five thousand pound price on his head, Churchill produced the 1899 leaflet in which the Boers had put a 25 pound price on his own head, and mumbled that five thousand pound was "a good price." Soon they were laughing about it as well as drinking together to all hours, debating the issues, insulting each other, and even exchanging renditions of patriotic songs.

In the end they negotiated British recognition of an Irish Free State with dominion status after the fashion of Canada and Australia. Condemned republicans would be spared. Foreign and defense matters would remain under British control. The partition of Ireland would not be recognized as permanent. This settlement was far less than the republican Collins wished, but it was far more than Britain had been willing to consider from Tudor times until the World War. As recently as Gladstone (in 1886) British governments had fallen at the hint of Irish home rule.

Collins signed the agreement with the remark that what he was signing was probably his death warrant. Churchill observed, with his typical generosity after a fight that "Ireland is not a daughter state. She is a parent nation." He was called a traitor in England; Collins was called the same in Ireland, even by De Valera, the man he had risked his life to rescue from Lincoln Jail two years before.

De Valera would not recognize British authority in any form, nor would he take an oath to George V, as under the treaty service in the future government of Ireland would require. But the Irish people were tired of strife and not so willing to die for principle when the essence of their long struggle for home rule had been won. Their representatives in the Dail voted to ratify the treaty with Britain. De Valera then went undergound, created what he called "Irregulars," and commenced a civil war against the provisional government under Collins.

Collins was now under attack and his life threatened by his former mentor De Valera, by British reactionaries, and by recalcitrant northern Protestants. His calm and valor in 1922 assured that the center would hold and home rule would succeed. Saying goodbye to Churchill after a conference he said: "I shall not last long. My life's forfeit, but I'll do my best. After I'm gone it will be easier for the others."

He had a victory left. On June 16, 1922, the Irish people voted overwhelmingly in favor of Collins' provisional government under the treaty with England and against De Valera's Irregulars who opposed the treaty. Then, in an act that defines the moral and political parameters of the Irish question down to our own day, De Valera and his forces chose to defy the electoral will of the Irish people. They undertook a terror campaign not only in England against the English, but also in Ireland against their own Irish Catholic countrymen.

Michael Collins shortly before his death.

The first victim was a British war hero, Sir Henry Wilson — assassinated in London. The second, accomplished on August 22, 1922 by several De Valera gunmen, was Michael Collins, who was ambushed and slain on a road near the burnt city of Cork.

Collins was 32 when murder stilled his voice, and De Valera was to live to attend the funeral of President Kennedy and to tell his version of Irish history to Americans as a venerable, sympathetic figure of old age. Fifteen years after Collins' murder he was elected Prime Minister, and 22 years after that, President.

Yet history records he would not abide by the will of his people in 1922, as history will record that the Irregulars and other extremists will not abide by the will of the Irish people today. For that reason the Irish Republican Army has continued to be outlawed by the Irish in Ireland. Thus outlawed, the I.R.A. has traded favors over the years with the likes of the Nazis, the Soviets, and the Libyans. Their objective today is to untie Ireland by force and replace its democratic institutions with a dictatorship of the left. Since the Irish people will never assent to such political ordure, the extremists opt for terror, which seems to be the contemporary method of choice of those who know they will lose a fair political fight.

I go into the history here because there is so much cant and ignorance on the part of domestic politicians around St. Patrick's Day when the subject of Ireland all too briefly arises. Mayor Flynn proposes settling the troubles with an all-Ireland referendum asking whether the north should be forced to join the Republic. (That would be like having Boston and Brookline vote as one on the annexation of Brookline by Boston — the combined majority deciding the question.) Sen. Kerry opposes extraditing bomb planters and riflemen who terrorize the north . . . and so it goes.

Such cant is a shame not only for the obvious reason that the bombers continue to purchase the bombs with American financial support. It is a shame because here in Greater Boston where Irish Americans have been so outstanding in their success and in their contributions to society, we could have a truly constructive influence on events in Ireland if we would only rid ourselves of cant and ignorance.

Honoring Michael Collins, and understanding him, is a good place to start.

Boston Marathon has new wrinkles this year

(The Boston Marathon annually draws multitudes of runners from the South Shore. Because of the interest and the new changes in the race this release by the Boston Athletic Association is published. Ed.)

The Boston Marathon's new finish line will be located between the old and new sections of the Boston Public Library on Boylston Street, near the corner of Boylston and Dartmouth Streets.

Runners will finish in the shadow of the 60-story John Hancock Tower, the corporate headquarters of John Hancock Financial Services, the Marathon's new corporate sponsor. Copley Square will serve as the center of post-race activity for marathoners and their families and friends.

As an added attraction, a 30-foot wide, high resolution color television screen will provide video coverage of the race to thousands of spectators in Copley Square.

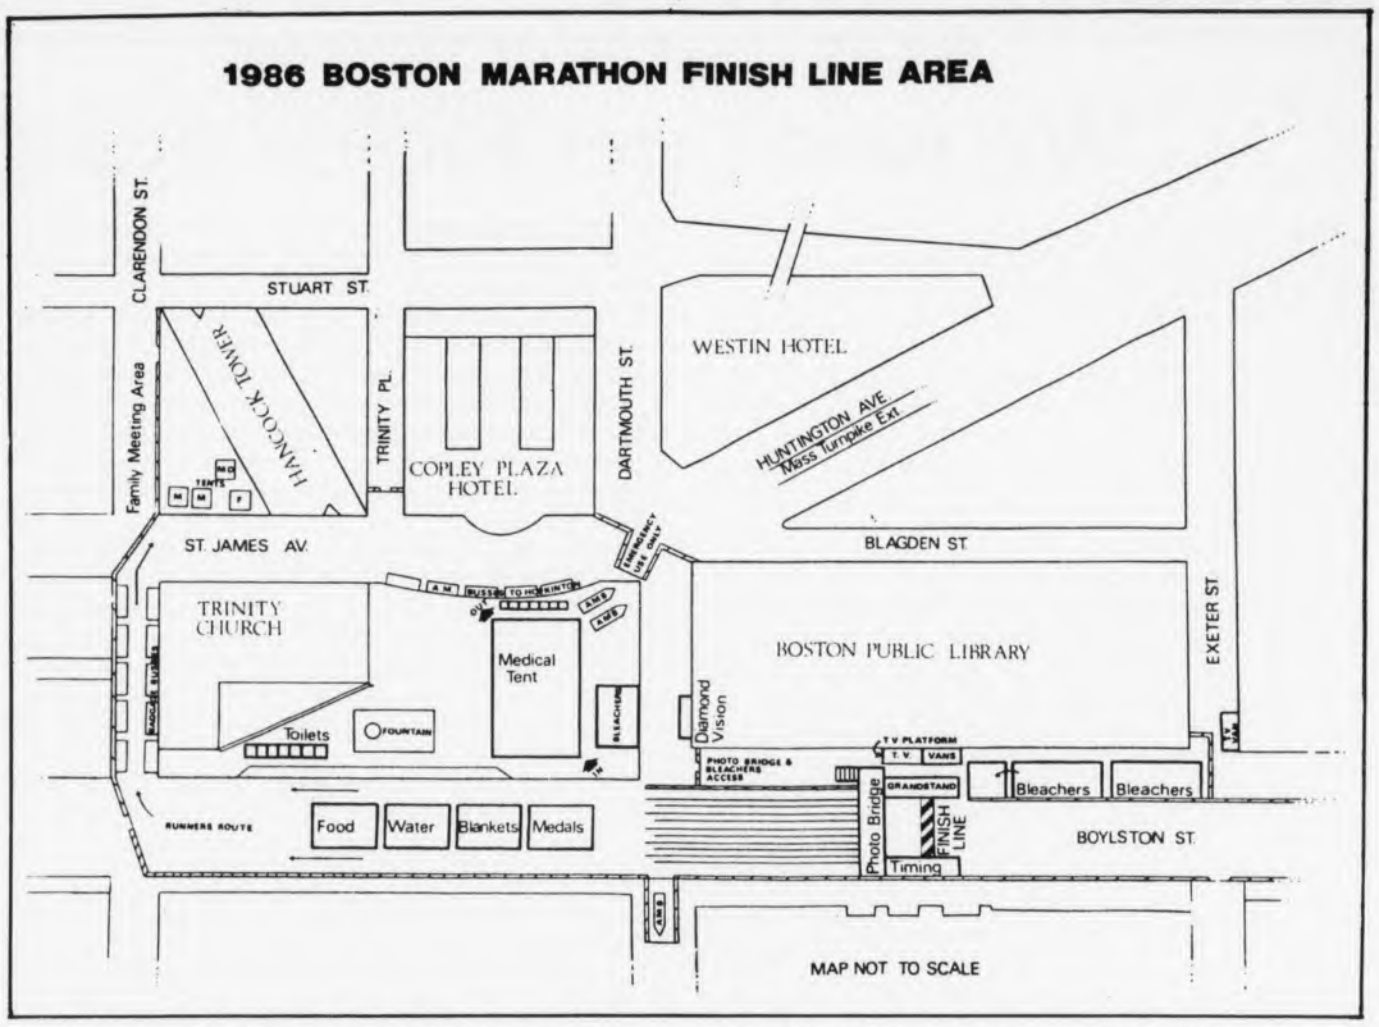
"The new location is going to make for a much more scenic and enjoyable finish overall," said Guy Morse of the Boston Athletic Association, noting that the finish line has been moved about 300 yards down Boylston Street from its previous location at Prudential Center.

"Now the race concludes with a 600-yard straightaway from Hereford Street to the tape, which will be especially advantageous from a spectator's standpoint if there's a close finish."

As they complete the race, runners will be guided through timing chutes and given medals, blankets, water and food on Boylston Street before turning right onto Clarendon Street and heading toward the base of the Hancock Tower. Runners requiring medical attention will be taken to a medical tent, staffed with 250 doctors and nurses, in Copley Square.

The Mayor's Office of Business and Cultural Development and the BAA coordinated the planning for the new finish line area. The City will provide a police detail for crowd and traffic control; the Department of Public Works will handle pre- and post-race clean-up; and the Parks Department, which maintains Copley Square, will provide race-day workers. Ambulances will be on standby in the Square.

"The movement of the finish line is symbolic of the Marathon's move into a new, rich era in sports history," noted David D'Alessandro, Hancock senior vice president of corporate communications. "With the sponsorship of John Hancock and a highly competitive field of world-class runners, the Boston Marathon has not only regained its throne as the world's premier running event, but has paved new avenues for improving the quality of the event."



D'Alessandro said the finish line area will take on a festive and bustling atmosphere. "A grandstand seating area along Boylston Street will hold about 1,400 persons and bleachers in front of the Diamond Vision screen on Dartmouth Street seat another 450," he explained. "We estimate that during the race, Copley Square will be filled with 6,000 or more spectators, race officials, volunteers and news media people."

In addition to its financial support of the Marathon and race-route communities, John Hancock has introduced a Running & Fitness Clinic program and provided the BAA with a variety of ancillary services, including use of facilities in its home office complex in Copley Square.

"Our intention is to make this year's Boston Marathon the most successful in the 90-year history of the race," said Morse. "We're doing everything possible to ensure that race-related activities are conducted smoothly."

More than 600 Hancock employees and family members have joined a volunteer program to assist the BAA with a number of race-related tasks throughout the race course.

Following the race, athletes will pick up their baggage from buses parked on Clarendon Street and use changing tents in front of the Hancock Tower.

To accommodate movement of the finish line toward the Tower, the race's starting line in Hopkinton was moved up about 35 yards and an additional 283 yards was gained by closing a loop at Route 135 in Ashland. TAC (The Athletic Congress) certified the altered race route March 14.

Naval Air Station to mark 75th anniversary

The South Weymouth Naval Air Station will hold a visiting day here on Saturday, May 10, from 11 a.m. to 4:30 p.m. in celebration of the 75th anniversary of naval aviation.

The main attraction will be the exhibition of a World War II vintage PBY Catalina flying boat. This aircraft, along with a second PBY, will be in the process of reenacting history's first aerial crossing of the Atlantic Ocean.

Unknown to most people, The Spirit of St. Louis was not the first plane to accomplish this feat. On May 8, 1919, three Navy bi-planes, NC-1, NC-3 and NC-4, departed from Rockaway, N.Y., to fly across the Atlantic.

Only one, the NC-4, commanded by Lt. Cmdr. Albert C. Read, USN, completed the 23-day flight to Plymouth, England, with many repair stops.

Eight years later, in 1927, Charles Lindbergh would make the first non-stop, solo flight from New York to Paris.

He did not forget the Navy's first valiant effort: "I had a better chance of reaching Europe in The Spirit of St. Louis than the NC planes had of reaching the Azores," he was quoted as saying.

"I had a more reliable type of engine and improved instruments. It was skill, determination and a hard-working crew that carried the NC-4 to the completion of the first transatlantic flight," he said.

The 1986 PBY reenactment of this 4,000-mile journey will follow the same route and exact departure times as the 1919 NC-4 flight. After departure from Rockaway, stops along the historic route will include the Air Station at South Weymouth; Chatham, Halifax, Trepassey Bay and St. Johns in Canada; Horta, Lajes and Ponta Delgada in the Azores; Lisbon and Mondego River in Portugal; El Ferrol in Spain; Brest in France; and, finally, Plymouth, England.

The public is invited to see the PBY during its stopover at NAS South Weymouth, and to view the other activities scheduled during the visiting day, such as the Navy parachute jumpers; military aircraft displays; radio-controlled airplane demonstrations; the Newport Navy Band; as well as crash, fire, rescue and water survival demonstrations.

Admission is free and concession stands will be available on the Air Station with food, beverages and Diamond Jubilee memorabilia.

In addition, a 10-K (6.2-mile) run will be held aboard the base beginning at 9 a.m. Entry fee is $7 and the first 80 paid participants will receive baseball caps. Advanced registration is mandatory. Awards will be presented in all categories.

For more information, contact Paul Hartigan at Recreation Services, Naval Air Base, South Weymouth, 786-2909.

Postal tips for taxpayers

The Post Office is reminding area residents all tax returns should have proper postage as well as a complete return address, including your name, street and number, city, state, and ZIP code.

The IRS and State Tax Bureaus will not accept returns with insufficient postage. The post office must send back hundreds of returns to taxpayers for additional postage.

With a complete return address, a postage due tax return can be returned immediately.

Otherwise, the return will go to the Dead Letter Office. This process is time consuming, slows down the return and potential refund.

The IRS envelope, a W-2 Form, a Form 1040 and three attachments weighs an ounce requiring a 22¢ stamp.

Anything beyond requires an additional 17¢ per additional ounce.

If the mailer has any doubts about the weight of the tax return, the post office recommends taking it to the local post office and have it weighed prior to mailing.

Proper postage and a return address will insure it is handled expeditiously.

NEARLY NATIVE — by DARRELL BERGER

We won't get fooled again - will we?

Twenty years ago this spring I graduated from a rural high school outside Toledo, Ohio. I was looking forward to college. Everything had gone as planned, except for one thing. The Viet Nam War wasn't over.

Actually, in 1966 the words "Viet Nam War" were almost never heard. It was "the fighting in Viet Nam" or "our involvement in Viet Nam." By any name it was supposed to be over long before I turned eighteen. That's what all the adults told me. I didn't worry about it.

At first I didn't worry about it much at college, either. I simply told my draft board I was in school. My grades were adequate so I never worried about flunking out and getting drafted.

In 1967 the first member of my high school class was killed in Viet Nam. He was from a Mexican family that had come north to pick tomatoes and stayed. Nobody said much because few knew him.

I played basketball with him. He was a nice guy.

Eventually being at a university brought the reality of "our involvement" home to me. Still, I wasn't able to separate ideology from fact. As you recall, there wasn't patience for reason or words of moderation in those days.

I also spent so much time studying I didn't squeeze in much news. Nor did I study the history of "our involvement."

I also devoted a lot of time to partying.

But I knew in my heart, and with what reason I could summon, that "our involvement" was a tragedy.

Which brings me to Nicaragua.

Since my wife returned from there in August we have been very frustrated at the lack of information. The lack isn't because of a news blackout, like in South Africa. It's because the press doesn't give any consistent attention to anywhere in the world unless a bomb kills U.S. citizens or Congress is about to send military aid.

So when the President gave a speech supporting his $100 million dollar aid to the contras, and the House of Representatives voted it down, we had a great deal of coverage about Nicaragua. For a week.

Having passed the Senate slightly changed, the bill is on its way back to the House. This will also attract some media attention, though not as much as before.

As I followed the House debate, I thought back 20 years, and how, as a high school boy, I didn't think about Viet Nam. What I now realize is that not enough adults thought about it, either.

Out of all that was said about Nicaragua, what stood out most clearly was the President's argument that we should send military aid now, so we won't have to send our boys later.

This advocates letting someone else do our fighting for us. We tried that, initially, in Viet Nam.

First the Vietnamese were to fight for us. Then, the way the draft was rigged, the white middle-class majority let the poor and non-white minorities do its fighting for them. And the dying.

If there had been no student deferrments during Viet Nam, boys like me would not have been sheltered from making a decision. Our parents would have been more aware of the war years earlier. If we had felt the consequences of our actions sooner, we could have awakened more of our citizens to informed political action.

During the House debate on contra aid, we heard about Marxists, Founding Fathers and farmers losing their land in Nebraska. Nobody asked what would happen to the people in Nicaragua.

They will die. Their children will die. Their dogs and cattle will die. Their land will be wasted and their homes destroyed.

If we feel the threat is great enough to do this, then we ought to do it. But we ought to do it. We shouldn't hire somone else to do it for us.

Our boys should drop the bombs on the villages. It should be young men from Cohasset and Marshfield that defend our security, not peasants from the hills of Nicaragua. And it should be our boys who die, our parents who weep.

To imagine we can make war in another's land without feeling the consequences is a lie. To imagine that others will defend our freedom is a lie. To give military aid based on these assumptions is a fraud.

We need far more national debate on this issue than we get. We need to get to the heart of the matter; who are we as a nation and what do we stand for?

There is a potential similarity between Viet Nam and Nicaragua. That potential must never be realized.

We have to think about what we are doing. Don't let television, newspapers and magazines be your only sources of information. Go to your local library and read a little about Nicaragua. Go out to a lecture. Hear people who have recently returned from there, even if you have to go all the way to Boston or Cambridge.

Allow people to have their ideas on this issue known and challenged. And especially allow us to disagree without becoming irrational and angry.

Deliver us from a nation again divided into hawks and doves.

The kids leaving high school this spring ought to think about Nicaragua, too.

To the Editor:

In reply to Mr. Berger's March 26 comments on what Jesus said about being 'born again'—it seems that Jesus met people 'where they were' and his choice of the words 'born again' in illustration to Nicodemus were repeated and insinuated several times throughout the rest of the story. Jesus used other words to other people he met to indicate the need for belief in Jesus as the Son of God to receive forgiveness of sin and claim eternal life, such as his use of 'living water' to the woman at the well in John's Gospel, Chapter 4.

'Born again' is a spiritual transformation, as in II Corinthians 5:17 "Therefore, if anyone is in Christ, he is a new creation; the old is gone, the new has come." John's gospel also explains in Chapter 1, Verses 12, 13; "Yet to all who received him, to those who believed on his name, he gave the right to become children of God—children born not of natural decent, nor of human decision or a husband's will, but born of God."

Born again means believing in the depths of ones' soul that:

Jesus is the Son of God (John Chapter 1 Verses 1-18; John 16:27; John 17:1-3 etc.)

Jesus died on the cross so that believers might have forgiveness from sin (John 3:16, John 14:6, I Timothy 1:15, I Peter 3:18).

Jesus rose from the dead and appeared to many witnesses (I Corinthians 15:4-8, John 20:1-31).

Christ will return (John 16:16, John 6:40).

He will take his kingdom of believers to live with him eternally—forever (John 14:1-4, I Thessalonians 4:16, 17).

Jesus said "If you do not believe I am the one I claim to be, you will indeed die in your sins." (John 8:24).

Lending ourselves to more courageous actions is commendable, but: "If only for this life we have hope in Christ, we are to be pitied more than all men." (I Corinthians 15:19).

Norwell

To the Editor:

I am disappointed that the Mariner printed Mr. Berger's article, "What Jesus said about being born again," not only because it was a cheap shot at many of us who live in Hingham, but because it was completely inaccurate.

Mr. Berger asks, "What does the Bible say about being born again?" He argues that the concept of the rebirth is found in only one statement made by Jesus "in private to a member of the Jewish aristocracy." "That's it for 'born again,' " Berger declares. "All the shouting and evangelistic finger-pointing relates to this one sentence."

He is making two points:

1. Rebirth is not a key biblical concept. It is only spoken of once, and in a way that makes its meaning unclear.

2. It is doctrine only taught by shouting, finger-pointing evangelists.

I can understand a Unitarian pastor wishing to console himself with such thoughts in the privacy of his study, but to print such things under one's name is foolish.

As to point Number 1, the expression "born again" and synonymous expressions relating to rebirth recur in the bible. A sample: Peter speaks of rebirth: "For you have been born again...through the living and enduring word of God" (I Peter 1:23).

John speaks of rebirth: "Everyone who believes that Jesus is the Christ is born of God" (I John 5:1).

Paul speaks of rebirth: "He saved us through the washing of rebirth and renewal by the Holy Spirit whom He poured out on us generously through Jesus Christ our Savior" (Titus 3:5,6).

Beyond these and other echoes of Jesus' conversation with Nicodemus, the concept itself is the basis of New Testament teaching, as stated so eloquently by the apostle Paul: "Therefore, if anyone is in Christ, he is a new creation; the old has gone, the new has come" (2 Corinthians 5:17).

As to point Number 2, all biblical Christians, in all places, at all times, have taught the necessity of the rebirth. A sample:

Roman Catholic teaching: "For in those who are born again, there is nothing that God hates" (The Council of Trent).

Episcopalian teaching: "Baptism...is also a sign of Regeneration of New Birth" (The Articles of Religion).

Presbyterian teaching: "When God converts a sinner...he frees him from his natural bondage under sin, and by his grace alone enables him freely to will and to do that which is spiritually good" (a descriptiсn of rebirth from the Westminster Confession of Faith). So, too, say the foundation documents of every Protestant denomination.

What is my point? Just this: Mr. Berger displayed his wishes but not the facts. The rebirth is a concept that permeates the Scriptures and has been declared so by all biblical Christians from the apostles on to our day. It is the essence of the church's good news that because of Jesus Christ, life can begin again.

Unitarians, from Arius on, have not fared well when appealing to the Bible, for they invariably grasp the sword by the blade.

Article was distasteful and offensive

To the Editor:

I am writing in response to an article which appeared in the March 26 Mariner written by Mr. Darrell Berger. I found the article very distasteful and personally offensive. As a born-again Christian, I will let the Word of God answer for itself.

" I Corinthians 2:14 - The man without the Holy Spirit does not accept the things of God. For they are foolishness to him, and he cannot understand them because they are spiritually discerned."

Such a person needs to experience the new birth.

Nickerson's 'Deathtrap' turns to melodrama

By Judith Montminy
Special to the Mariner

THEATRE REVIEW

Before we arrived at the Nickerson Theatre to see "Deathtrap," my companion was warned that the evening would offer some truly startling, scary moments.

Unfortunately, given director Nora Hussey's interpretation of the Ira Levin classic thriller, the warning was not necessary.

During Act I, Myra Bruhl (Sandra Shipley), the wife of thriller playwright Sidney Bruhl, is accused by her husband of being too melodramatic. She replies that she has become accustomed to a life filled with melodrama. It seems as if director Hussey has taken those lines to heart.

"Deathtrap" at the Nickerson is a melodrama, not a thriller. The humor, interwoven by Levin as a tension release for the audience, has become the dominant element in the Nickerson production.

The laughter throughout Act II was not nervous laughter, often the response of an audience sitting on the edge of its seats. The laughter was the response to character foibles and sudden plot twists.

Yes, there are some surprises. Yes, there are times the audience gasps. But this production of "Deathtrap" is too loosely pulled together—the cutting edge is missing.

In terms of its construction (as a play that has been wrought), "Deathtrap" is fascinating. Playwright Levin foretells just about everything that is going to happen and has orchestrated the plot to keep the audience guessing all the time. The audience is given a treatise on the proper markings of a good thriller ("A thriller must have intricate plotting and contrived theatrics...'reversal' is an important element in all drama...").

"The audience should suspect, but they shouldn't be absolutely certain," Clifford Anderson (Bob Riley) asserts. Clifford was a seminar student of Sidney Bruhl's and has sent Bruhl an excellent first play, "Deathtrap."

The scene is Bruhl's weapon-filled study in Westport, Conn. The once successful playwright considers what to do with a new play.

He hasn't had a hit play in years and thinks "Deathtrap" will be sure-fire success. Would it be worth killing for? Bruhl (Paul O'Brien) decides to invite Anderson to his home to review the script, or so he says.

O'Brien appears too young for the part of Sidney Bruhl, who was first hooked on thrillers when he saw "Angel Street." He is supposed to be the older, wiser teacher to Anderson's eager, promising student. Both O'Brien and Riley look like contemporaries, not mentor and pupil.

Riley's sometimes whining performance detracts from the presence of the handsome, confident young playwright. It's hard to take a whiner seriously, let alone view him as a potential menace.

It is Bob Bouffier, as Bruhl's attorney, Porter Milgrim, who gives the strongest, most controlled performance in the play.

Ingrid Sonnichsen is duly eccentric as the psychic Dutch neighbor, Helga Ten Dorp. She is the comic relief Levin provides for an audience who is supposed to be sitting on the edge. But the edge just isn't there at the Nickerson. Not yet, at least. Act I is too slow and Act II doesn't seem to get cranked up—precision, control, and tension are missing from this production of "Deathtrap."

"Deathtrap" continues at the Nickerson Theatre in Norwell through May 3. Performances are Tuesday through Thursday at 8 p.m.; Friday at 8:30 p.m.; Saturday at 4 p.m. and 8:30 p.m.; Sunday at 2 p.m. and 7 p.m. The Nickerson Theatre is located off Route 3, exit 14.

'Deathtrap' plot is terrifying and hysterical

By Judy Gilman
Special to the Mariner

I hate to sound like someone who is constantly promoting the Nickerson Theatre, but this Norwell theatre has another winner in "Deathtrap."

After seeing it, you can understand why it had such a long run on Broadway.

The plot is both terrifying and hysterical, the cast is very expert, and even the soundtrack is good.

All and all, this is a faultless production. Maybe it was because it opened in Norwell on Good Friday night that the theatre was only half full. It definitely deserves a bigger audience than that.

Following the instructions of the voice on the loudspeaker at the very beginning, I won't give away the plot.

Suffice it to say that it's both terrifying and funny, often at the same time.

Foster care spring fair to be held

Everyday on the South Shore, at least five children are in need of a foster parent. Sometimes these children are brothers and sisters who should be able to stay together.

In response to this community need, a partnership of foster parents, citizen councils and social service agencies will be sponsoring a Foster Care Spring Fair, Thursday, April 17, 1986 from 7:30-9:30 p.m., at the Coastal Community Counseling Center, 574 Main Street (Rt. 18) Weymouth. The fair's purpose will raise community awareness, but also invite community residents to consider becoming foster parents.

The Foster Care Spring Fair will provide an opportunity to hear from current foster parents and foster care placement agencies—both public and private—as well as to meet local legislators. In addition, a filmstrip, "Children Need Families," will be shown.

Judy Baker, a Weymouth foster parent and member of the fair's planning committee has commented, "The solution to child abuse and neglect is linked to quality foster care. Foster children under 12 currently receive only $8.34 a day in support from the state. It's a community problem which can only be solved on a community basis. We encourage everyone to come to the fair on behalf of the children of the South Shore."

For more information, call Colleen Doherty or Mary Thomas at the Office for Children at 849-1882.

Great Mariner recipes stand the test of time

It was only 14 pages, the ads were slightly on the skimpy side, and the news of the week was that the Coast Guard would at last repair the Union Street bridge spanning the North River separating Marshfield and Norwell. That was the Marshfield Mariner's first edition, published April 13, 1972.

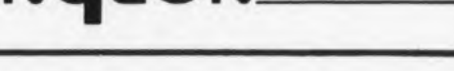
The copy I saved is yellowing, current editions are three times larger and we're still waiting for the brdige to be fixed. Way back then, there were only four on the staff, and as I was the only one with the additional task of feeding a family of five, guess who was asked to write a cooking column! Little did they know that hardly a night went by without someone turning up his nose at the food on his plate.

I decided the only way to go was to solicit help from our readers, so I asked them to send in their favorite, time-tested recipes, knowing fullwell that my family was not about to welcome the role of guinea pig.

So, with the input from all of you, here we are 14 years later, having all shared some great recipes, such as this one of Reanne Rosenhahn's. Great for company, as it serves 14, it was Oct. 10, 1975, when we first printed Reanne's recipe for

POLISH CHEESECAKE

Graham cracker crust:
1 1/4 c. crumbs
1/4 c. each sugar and oleo
Melt oleo, mix with sugar and crumbs. Line 13x9" pan.
First filling:
1 lb. cream cheese
1/2 c. sugar
3 eggs
3/4 tsp. vanilla
Combine in mixer. Pour over crumbs. Bake at 370 for 20 min.
Second filling:
1 pint sour cream
1/4 c. sugar
1 tsp. vanilla
Pour on first mixture when cool. Sprinkle with nuts and cherries. Refrigerate 24 hours ahead of serving.



An "Around Town" item in that first issue wrote of a local fisherman's supposed reaction to news of Marshfield's having its own weekly: "Suffering succotash, that's great! I ain't had nothing to wrap my haddock in."

Other men have used their weekly as an outlet for their cooking hobby Prof. Clinton McCoy sent us a recipe using mushrooms; Dana Blackman shared his recipe from boyhood days in Brant Rock, "coot stew"; Jay O'Callahan, our now-famous storyteller, his recipe for "Old Stone Farm" bread, and John Burchill, an amateur diver, told us how to prepare squid.

Marshfield's author-historian Edward Rowe Snow gave us his recipe for preparing chowder from the clams he dug from the marshes beyond his home, and Ward Collins Cramer told of serving his bed and board guests "mussels mariniere" as an appetizer. And then, there was Alex Rutledge's "ring-a-ding-ding pie" with which he treated his guests. Here is how bachelor, Ben Merit, makes this appetizer called

GUACAMOLE

2 ripe avocadoes, peeled and pitted
2 garlic cloves, mashed to a paste
2T lemon juice, or to taste
In a bowl, mash avocadoes with fork, add garlic and juice and salt and pepper to taste. Makes about 1 1/2 cup.

In June of '74, Dorothy Aronson sent in a recipe that we all think is so great, that this is the fifth time it has appeared in this column. It came to her by way of a friend in California and is called simply

ZUCCHINI CASSEROLE

4 med. zucchini, sliced 1/2" thick
3/4 c. shredded carrot
1/2 med. onion, chopped
6T butter or oleo
2 1/4 c. herbed stuffing mix, or croutons
Can condensed cream chicken soup
1/2 c. dairy sour cream
Cook zucchini in water until slightly tender. Drain. Cook carrots and onion in 4T of butter until tender. Stir in 1 1/2 c. stuffing mix, soup and sour cream. Gently stir in zucchini, or put in layers. Turn into 1 1/2 qt. casserole. Melt remaining butter and add stuffing. Toss gently and put on top of casserole. Bake uncovered in 350 oven for 30 to 40 min. Serves six.

In all these years, your recipes have been a welcome addition to the column, and we all look forward to reading your families favorite. Just send them to me at Box 25, Marshfield Hills, 02051.

THE DRAGON'S DUNGEON — By Claire McDonough

Please forgive me for writing this column

"I can't find my socks," Skip whined. "Tell Breida to look for them."

Breida looked startled. "Why am I responsible for his socks?"

The Dragon glared at me. "You haven't trained her very well, have you?"

I looked down at my feet. "I'm sorry," I sighed.

"Hey, wait a minute," Breida objected. "How come it's my fault that Skip can't find his socks? And how come you're accepting the guilt because I'm not overcome with contrition?"

"It's time you knew, dear," I told her gently. "Feeling guilty is part of the feminine mystique. Like needing extra calcium and iron. It's part of some vast universal plan. Women are supposed to fell guilty for everything that goes wrong. When Freud spoke about 'free-floating guilt, he wasn't specific enough. If the guilt is out there, women will grab it."

Breida frowned. "But it doesn't make any sense at all. Does Skip know where my nylons are? Or does he have any reason to know where they are? Does he feel guilty if I don't have an ironed blouse?"

Skip looked abashed. "Of course not. It wouldn't be manly."

"Well then," Breida continued reasonably, "why should I know where his socks are? Where did this 'feminine mystique' business start, anyway?

I thought for a minute.

"You'll never catch Betty Freidan saying so," I said, "but I have a theory that it goes back to the Garden of Eden. You know? When the Lord asked Adam why he ate the fruit, and Adam said, 'The woman you gave me tempted me, and I did sin?'

"Eve hadn't been brainwashed into accepting guilt, so she thought fast and blamed the serpent. Adam was less than pleased, because he didn't like having his wife contradict him. Especially in front of the Lord, the serpent, and that angel with the flaming sword, so he thought up an idea of programming women to accept guilt.

"Fascinating," Breida said. "How does it work?"

"I'm not sure," I admitted, "but I have a theory.

"Have you ever noticed that most obstetricians are men? My guess is that before a baby girl leaves the delivery room, the doctor sneaks over and whispers in her ear, 'It's all your fault.'

"The poor kid's just been born, she doesn't even know what's going on in the world, and already she's being blamed for it.

"Then when the pediatrician examines her, he waits till no one is watching and hisses, 'Never go anywhere without your purse.'

"Have you ever noticed a little girl toddler running around clutching a pocketbook? Or how for the rest of her life whenever she's leaving the house she looks around frantically and yells 'Where's my purse?' "

Breida nodded slowly. "That makes sense. And it explains why when Daddy asked you if you were going to have the van washed, you said, 'I would, but it's starting to rain. I'm sorry.' "

"I've also seen you apologize to tables when you bump into them.

"Not only have you been preconditioned to feel guilt, but, because in our society money is essential for just about everything, by making you responsible for the purse the pediatrician makes you believe that no matter what goes wrong, it's your fault."

Skip and the Dragon looked at each other.

"Did you ever hear anything so dumb in your life?" Skip asked.

"It's pretty far out," the Dragon agreed, "but it is typical female logic."

"I know," I apologized hastily, "and I really am sorry about that. But it might make an interesting column for the Mariner.

"The only thing is, I can't think of an appropriate title."

I turned to Breida. "What do you think I should call it?"

Her brow furrowed in concentration. "Let me think about it," she suggested, then went to her room where we heard her pacing.

She returned a short while later looking crestfallen.

"I can't think of a thing," she said. "I'm sorry."

"Don't worry," I reassured her. "It's really all my fault."

I looked around nervously. "Has anyone seen my purse."

fants which is being sold to hospitals, HMO's, clinics and parent-support organizations throughout the country.

"I had a son three months premature," Pilczak explained. "I went through the experience and later realized there was no materials or training for these mothers, or anyone I was in contact with."

After three years of research and talking with health professionals about the problem, PGG Associates began filming in Brigham and Women's Hospital in Boston. Two nurses, nationally-recognized experts in their field, were hired as technical experts. What concluded is a "very realistic program and training program for medical people to help them better support mothers in this emotional time," she stated.

Recognizing the need to proceed slowly, the consultants divided the program into three parts. The first part extends to about four to six weeks after the birth. The handout materials are then suited to the mother's needs in that period, and a second and third section fills out the remaining time.

The consultants have three or four other topics currently lined up for possible future development.

"The difference between our efforts in the technical area and other consultants, is that we work with the subject matter experts in a variety of areas. We are capable of working with different types of companies and people to provide them with technical materials," Green said.

He added, "small companies often look at training procedures for the big companies only. But every time a small company brings in new equipment, if they are not trained properly, they will not function effectively or efficiently. If the company can not train them, there are other people who can do that. We can help provide the solution. We'll tell a company if it's a waste of time hiring us as training consultants. We will never solve a non-training problem with a training solution. That would not make us look good."

Susan Killilea is new services representative

The Boston Five Cents Savings Bank FSB recently appointed Suzan R. Killilia of Cohasset to Financial Services Representative at its Norwell Loan Office, located at 45 Pond St.

In her new position Mrs. Killilea will provide retail banking services to Norwell area residents and will be available to meet with customers at their convenience.

Since opening in June 1983, the Bank's Norwell Office has operated primarily as a residential lending facility. The success of Norwell's mortgage operation, combined with the public's demand for retail services, prompted the Bank to expand its range of customer services in Norwell to include such retail, or "deposit," products as: Certificates of Deposit; Individual Retirement Accounts and other pension plans; and Money Market Fund Accounts. Small transaction business will not be available at this time, but may be added in the near future based on the market's needs.

According to Stephen R. Dwan, Boston Five loan officer and manager of the Norwell office, "With a professional like Suzan on board, customers will be able to discuss their personal banking needs with an expert — and at their convenience. She can keep depositors abreast of investment and savings opportunities — be it changes in rates, or new products."

A former Hingham public school teacher, Mrs. Killilea comes to The Boston Five from Unicom in Dedham where she worked as a sales representative. A long-time resident of Cohasset, she is a graduate of Lesley College.

Great turnout cast votes to keep incumbents

Record results

The only upset in last Saturday's election was the amount of time it took to count the ballots.

While campaign workers settled down to supper with plans to return later that night, Town Clerk Frances Marks and her election workers began the ballot count. But rather than taking the expected number of hours, the results were calculated within the hour.

By 6:45 p.m., less than one hour after the close of the polls, the complete and accurate results of the election were prepared.

Marks and her town hall office staff laughed Monday morning as they explained the situation.

"No one was here. We completed the count in record time and no one was here to see us!" Mrs. Marks chuckled Monday morning. The town clerk explained that an electronic ballot counter, demonstrated by a company at no charge to the town, was responsible for the quick count.

A computer printout showing the candidates, the precinct count, and the percentage total were ready at 6:45 p.m. "It actually took us less than 45 minutes to get the totals because we had spent about ten minutes preparing the ballots in bundles of fifties. But when Mr. Fitzpatrick came in with the machine, he said we didn't need to count the ballots. All we had to do was stuff them into the machine," she explained.

Asst. Town Clerk Constance Jones noted the machine was similar to a vacuum cleaner as it sucked in the paper ballots one-by-one. "The air feeds the ballots into the machine - it even sounds like a vacuum cleaner. It was great. But no one was here to see it," she commented.

Normally, an election with a crowded field of candidates such as Saturday's, and the large turnout, would take the workers several hours to hand count. "Basically, I'd say we would be finished around 10 or 11 p.m.," Mrs. Marks said. "We have to do it as methodically as we can, so it takes a lot of time."

But with the demonstration machine, the workers finished their task and cleaned up their work area by 7 p.m.

Mrs. Marks noted that a machine similar to the one demonstrated Saturday would cost the town $10,400. Although she requested such a machine,

No surprises

In the end, it was an election that declared the voters' satisfaction with the status quo.

All contested incumbents were re-elected, each gathering a high number of votes in Saturday's election.

A contrast in campaigns had similar results in the race for selectmen. Incumbent Clifford Mitman Jr., who just days before the campaign began actually decided to run, regained his seat on the board of selectmen. Mitman gathered 1,153, more than the other five candidates running for two seats on the board.

Mitman's campaign had a low-key approach. Signs declaring his candidacy appeared only the day before the election.

The other seat was won by Jim Gallagher, who admittedly campaigned hard for the victory. His 1,149 votes were won by "giving it all I had." His campaign committee, guided by a nucleus of ten persons who had worked in his campaign last year,

Health Board moves to close commercial landfill

By John Magadieu
Mariner Staff

The Board of Health determined last week liquid waste from Cohasset Heights Landfill is a danger to the town's water supply. By suspending the dump's site assignment, they forced it to close.

Attorney Anton Moehike, representing Cohasset Heights Ltd., will challenge the suspension in court.

Concerned citizens packed 43 Elm Street last Thursday for a five-hour marathon hearing. When the dust had cleared, Cohasset Heights Ltd. found their site assignment amended in four areas and suspended in three others.

Peter Pratt, chairman of the water commission, told the board, "We believe that the public water supplies, specifically those under our jurisdiction in Lily Pond adjacent to our main water facility, are in jeopardy."

"I don't think this town should believe that the solution to pollution is dilution."

Clarence Beatty, the town's engineering consultant from Camp, Dresser and McKee, agreed, "We estimate at least 20 percent of the leachate which reaches the landfill's liner actually is discharged to groundwater." Leachate is the liquid waste that percolates out of trash at landfills.

Robert Cummings of GHR Engineering explained about 1,000 gallons of leachate are produced each day as the dump takes in 299 tons of trash.

Beatty estimated the amount of leachate is "much more than 1,000 gallons." He argued a recirculation process increases the amount of leachate produced at the dump.

"We estimated in our 1984 report that very minimal quantities of leachate are flowing in the direction of Lily Pond," he said.

"Based on the information we have," he added, "I cannot say that there is absolutely, without any question, no danger to the water supply."

The engineer explained most of the pollution is flowing away from the pond and into a swamp.

But Pratt said trace amounts of pollutants, including benzine and vinyl chloride have been found in Brass Kettle Brook, a tributary to Lily Pond.

He added Lily Pond so far has tested clean.

William Baird, a member of the water shed protection committee, said, "I would like to tell the board that I recognize those two components as known carcinogens and mutagens."

Robert Cummings of GHR Engineering defended the landfill.

"These are minor amounts of chlorinated hydrocarbons," he said, "standard trash from your home . . . A half-empty can of Liquid Plumber for example."

Baird called the contaminated ground water "hazardous waste" and said "I don't think this town should believe that the solution to pollution is dilution."

Beatty blamed the landfill's liner design and its process of recirculation of leachate and groundwater for the problem.

Rivalry strong between two 'good sports'

By Jane Lane
Mariner Staff

The Cohasset Race by the Sea may be over, but the competition remains strong.

Long after the times have been preserved for posterity, runners throughout the South Shore will remember the course by the sea.

The fever of competition runs strong, not only in the blood of the athletes, but in minds of all would-be runners.

No where in last week's race was the desire to win stronger than in the team competition between Cohasset Liquors and Good Sport. Normally, the owners of the two establishments, Peter Logan and Austin Lyne Jr., are friends and business associates.

But on that one Sunday in April, the comradery fades and competition reigns. It is no longer two fellow Rotarians having a bit of fun for a great cause. On this one day they are opponents seeking a single goal - victory.

Why? According to Cohasset Liquors owner Logan, the answer is logical. "Why not?" he said this week, still basking in his team's win over the Good Sport group. "It's a natural competition when you think of the product he sells - you know, all sports equipment and clothes. Then look at what we sell.

"You'd think Good Sport would win over us every year. But we've finished better than them every year."

With a bruised ego, Lyne admitted his team has lost the competition five straight years. But with the confession came a promise. "You can quote me. Good Sport will beat Cohasset Liquors next year," he stated.

"If I have to pay runners under the table to join my team, we will win," he said with some sarcasm.

Lyne and Logan admit there is a lot of fun beneath the competition. The event, which has been sponsored by Cohasset Rotary for the past six years, is a day of community spirit and comradery for everyone involved.

Last Sunday, April 6 was no exception. Despite the cold, wind and mist, the 700 runners finished a 10K race that has become a favorite course of South Shore athletes.

The team competition evolved about four years ago, the two store owners agreed. The rivalry between Good Sport and Cohasset Liquors grew from that competition two years later. The winning team receives a trophy. The two store owners decided the prize would best be displayed in their respective establishment.

"Peter has just enlisted the best runners to run for Cohasset Liquors," Lyne analyzed. "I've tried to do the same. I have a mix of people running for Good Sport, including friends, relatives and customers. The competition between us is really a joke. The idea of the team championship is for the town. It's a good, friendly competition. Our team runs in Good Sport tee shirts and we have a great time."

The Cohasset Liquors team placed fourth in the men's team competition, and second in the women's division. Good Sport trailed in the results, placing tenth in the men's team division.

The team results from last week's race were: Men's - 1. Reebok, 2. BAA, 3. Stretch, 4. Cohasset Liquors, 5. Fitcorp, 6. Hingham High, 7. Harbor

Classification study

The consultant hired by the town to complete a classification study of the non union town employees will present a draft of that report April 29.

Caleb Marsh and Associates of Hingham will present the draft of the revised classification and compensation plan to the personnel committee on that date.

The consultant's study will include a complete review and recommendations regarding the employee classification study and evaluation system.

More mediation meetings

The state Joint Labor-Management Committee for Municipal Fire and Police has scheduled another mediation session between the town and the police union.

The meeting, which is scheduled for April 15 and 23, will be held at 6:30 p.m. at Cohasset Town Hall.

The union and town officials were requested to bring pertinent materials to the meeting, and to be represented by authorized agents.

The police union and the town have been negotiating a contract for more than a year. The town voted at the December special town meeting, to implement a five percent raise to the police officers because of the contract stalemate.

Harbor meeting May 6

Selectmen have planned a special meeting May 6 at 7:30 p.m. to discuss issues concerning the harbor.

The harbormaster, the harbor study committee, and town counsel will be in attendance. Anyone interested in discussing the harbor bylaws and mooring rules and regulations is invited to attend the public meeting.

Selectmen are eager to discuss any concerns from the public or the commercial fishermen who use the harbor daily.

No parking sign complaint

A resident of North Main Street has protested the planned installation of No Parking signs for Daley Square at the intersection of Jerusalem Road and Main Street.

Jacqueline Whipple suggested the signs may "have the unintended effect of increased parking and traffic hazards and bottlenecks on busy North Main Street and possibly Jerusalem Road," she stated.

She asked selectmen to reconsider their decision to install the signs at the intersection. Whipple noted in her letter to the board, "If all these folks on legitimate business try to park up and down North Main Street between driveways, blocking vision and impeding traffic, I believe they will cause far more problems than if they pull up beside the greem as they always have."

With the springtime, arrives new life to all creatures. Here, a mallard sits atop her eggs beneath a shroud of leaves. It appears this duck is well-fed with catered meals sent directly to her nest.

(Eric Francis)

Committee reorganization

Reorganization of the school committee took place at its Monday night meeting.

Joseph Nedrow was voted chairman of the 1986 committee. That is the position he held the past year.

Member Richard Conley was elected vice chairman, and Barbara Bliss will serve as secretary. The next meeting of the committee will be held Monday, May 5 at 8 p.m.

Parker Ave septic system spilling onto street

After several months of protest and complaints, the board of health is ordering the repair of a failing septic system at 15 Parker Avenue.

Robert A. Pattison Jr. of 19 Parker Ave. has complained since last August about a failing septic system at the next door property. Since that time the system has been pumped once, but has failed again.

Currently, there is sewage flowing from the system down onto the Pattison's driveway. Pattison said the effluent is running down his driveway into the street catch basin which flows directly into the harbor.

"It stinks," Pattison complained, adding his children are unable to play basketball or soccer in the driveway while the sewage overflows from the failed next door system.

Health Agent Joseph Godzik supported those statements, noting the health board has attempted since November to order the repair of the system.

After repeated orders were issued last fall, property owner Saffie Hoss had the system pumped in November. Within another month, the effluent rose again and Pattison made another plea to the health board.

The health board has made repeated attempts to contact owner Hoss who lives in West Virginia. There are people living at 15 Parker Avenue, but they do not include property owner Hoss.

The owner was most recently sent a certified letter from the board of health. Although she received the letter, there was no response from the out-of-state resident.

Saying the sewage runoff was "certainly a health hazard," agent Godzik said the board determined last night to seek legal action against the owner. The matter was turned over to town counsel who will proceed with a court order demanding the repair of the Parker Avenue septic system.

In the interim, Dr. Godzik noted, the court should order the system be pumped to alleviate the overflow situation.

The problem with the system at 15 Parker Street is that when it fails the ground becomes saturated. Water from the system breaks out over the surrounding ground which eventually drains into the Pattison's driveway and onto the street.

Dr. Godzik has viewed the system several times since Pattison made the complaint. "Within the last couple of weeks the owners have either stopped pumping, or something else has changed because the sewage is running down the driveway," he commented.

Prior to the system's pumping last November, the sewage had overflowed the property, Dr. Godzik said, and had reached the catch basin on Parker Avenue.

Pattison wrote a letter last week to the health board and selectmen, outlining his concern with the next door system. "I believe I have been patient long enough, and that this is a hazard to my family's health. I would appreciate your immediate attention on this matter," he stated.

The overflow problem began last August. After talking with one of the residents at 15 Parker Avenue, the system was pumped. In November, the system failed again. But it wasn't until the health board threatened legal action that the system was pumped, Pattison recalled.

Within five weeks the system once again failed and the sewage leaked onto the Pattison property. Engineer Neal Murphy was contacted by the health board, but according to Pattison, he can not conduct tests without permission from the owner. Despite repeated attempts to talk with Saffie Hoss, the engineer has not been successful.

Pattison has taken photographs of the sewage outbreak and had selectmen view the problem.

"Why don't they (the board of health) just condemn the building and kick the people out of the house?" he asked this week. "It's terrible. They should condemn the place. The sewage is flowing right onto my property, into a catch basin and right into the harbor. It's taken too long to fix this problem. We can't do anything on our property because of this."

Eastern Edison 'Good Neighbor Fund' grows

"Contributions to the 'Good Neighbor Energy Fund' have surpassed everyone's expectations," says Eastern Edison Co. Customer Service Manager Barbara A. Hassan.

The Good Neighbor Energy Fund was launched last November by a group of 16 Massachusetts utilities to help customers pay their heating bills. Customers were asked via bill enclosures to send contributions to the Salvation Army, which disburses it to eligible applicants.

"So far, more than 3,200 customers of Eastern Edison Co. have contributed to the fund. With the company's matching grant, our area's contribution to date amounts to nearly $33,000," Hassan said.

The fund is intended to help households that need assistance but do not qualify for direct state or federal government aid.

"We're looking to help the 'working poor,' low-income elderly, the handicapped, and those experiencing a financial hardship due to illness, unemployment or other unforeseen circumstances," Ms. Hassan said.

Statewide, the fund has $460,000 available for households across Massachusetts to help pay heating bills. "We urge anyone who thinks he or she may be eligible to contact their local office of the Salvation Army," Hassan said.

To date, 43 Eastern Edison customers have received assistance paying their heating bills from the fund.

Laugelle & Gallagher cite 'padded' legal charges

Selectmen Rocco Laugelle and James Gallagher refused payment for legal services provided in the negotiation of a modified Ward Engineering sewer plan.

Gallagher, a self-employed general contractor, said the bill was "padded. I wouldn't dare give my customers this type of bill."

Article 20 of the December special town meeting requested $30,000 for the payment of legal services during negotiations with the state for a sewer plan. Part of the approval included a requirement that all payments first be reviewed and approved by selectmen.

The board recently received a bill approved for payment by the sewer commissioners. The bill for legal services rendered by special counsel from the firm of Goodwin, Proctor and Hoar totaled $6,877.93.

"I do not recall any meeting or a single vote taken to expend one cent on any of these appropriations (from special town meeting)," Selectman Mary Jane McArthur said. "We voted to do this in a specific manner."

Selectman Diane Sullivan said the balance stated in the bill had been encumbered, so the town must pay it. "But we should send the sewer commission a letter about the proper (payment) procedure," she said. McArthur added, "we will not pay in the future until the procedure is followed."

After the meeting Gallagher said he was "really upset the board approved payment of that bill."

He and Selectman Laugelle opposed the way the bill was structured. No specific work was outlined in the bill. There was a subtotal of $3,500 for "indirect labor" services.

"I don't know what that was," Gallagher said. "There is no explanation for indirect labor and then there was a line asking for 18 percent for overhead costs. What does that mean? I am very disappointed the bill was paid. Where is this money going? Do they deserve this money?"

In comparison, Gallagher said Town Counsel Richard Henderson's bills are forwarded with details explaining each charge. "That's a proper bill," he added. "I think this one for the sewer plan is incorrect and I disagree with it.

"I think the Ward Plan is running out of rope, and I'm running out of patience."

Logan, one of the organizers of the annual roadrace, along with Roy Fitzsimmons, was pleased with the entire event.

Last Sunday's event was an unqualified success, according to Logan. More than 850 runners registered, with about 700 completing the 6.2 mile course. Rainy, windy weather probably held the numbers down, he explained.

About $5,000 was earned through registration fees, he noted. Because most of the services are donated by local businessmen, the tallys at the end of the day belong solely to the Rotary.

The money gathered from the roadrace will go towards the Rotary's community services, including partial financing of a senior shuttle bus, sponsorship of the Cohasset Special Olympics teams, and high school scholarships.

Logan said the Cohasset race is gaining in popularity each year. There were four other races in the Greater Boston area the same day, and Cohasset had the largest number of participants, he said. The club members agreed that because the number of participants is expanding each year, they will have to set a limit of 1,000 runners.

Surprisingly, there were no dog problems, Logan noted. No racers reported dog dilemmas throughout the entire course.

What was a surprise to Logan and his fellow Rotarians was the number of registered walkers during the morning's 10K non competitive walk.

"I must have heard from 20 people afterwards that they didn't know we were having a walk in the morning. People loved it. The comradery during the walk was great. They had a wonderful time," he said.

Eighty walkers registered for the course, and about 50 completed the trek. Judging from the comments made after the popular event, there will be "at least 200 walkers next year," he predicted.

It was Logan's idea to incorporate the walk into the Rotary event. Although well-publicized, Logan said many people have told him since they would have joined the walk if they had known about it.

"A lot of people have said to me, I can walk the course. That's not painful," he laughed. "I really expect a big crowd there next year."

There were no problems except one, to darken that meteorologically dismal day. And that will be remedied in time for the 1987 race.

"Next year, we've going to buy a couple of Johnny on the Spots," he seriously insisted. "We had a line of people waiting to use the town hall bathrooms before and after the race and that system really backed up. It took hours to fix. Next year, we'll rent a couple of portable facilities and avoid that problem."

Leaders of the April 6 Rotary roadrace begin the treacherous climb along Forest Avenue at Atlantic Avenue.

A great turnout for the Cohasset town election. . .

included 100 supporters. "I had good vibes this year and a lot of support from my family and my wife's family."

The Short Street resident said after his narrow defeat last year by Diane Sullivan, "a lot of people and local officials urged me to run again this year. I got a lot of calls encouraging me to run again. If I lost this time, I wouldn't do it again. But I gave it everything I had."

Gallagher said the issues he is concerned with include the protection of the town's water supply. "I am very concerned with all aspects of people's problems," he added. "Whether they are in precinct one or precinct two, I have a good rapport with them and I really listen to their problems.

"I understand what's going on. I feel like I could give a lot to the community. I've been involved in this community and in local politics and I've seen what's going on. I am the type who will say 'no,' we can't let that happen, and I can get together and work toward a solution."

The other candidates included Martha Gjesteby, Vito Conte, Jerome Whitney III and John McNabb Jr. McNabb has stated he will run for the board of selectmen again next year.

School committee incumbent Diana Kornet was re-elected to her third full term on the board. She filled one year of an unexpired term, and has served a total of seven years on the school committee.

Kornet's 1,236 votes earned her re-election despite opposition from three candidates, including top vote-getter Christopher Ford. His 1,324 votes earned him a seat on the board along with Kornet.

Kornet said her victory demonstrated "that probably the citizens are pretty pleased with the way the school committee has been working the past three years.

"I heard a lot of positive things during my campaign which was probably reflected in my re-election. But it's likely if there were complaints, those people went to other candidates, not to me," she noted.

As she looked forward to another three years on committee, the incumbent stated, "It will be pretty exciting to have the opportunity to recharge our batteries and start with a new slate with a new superintendent and high school principal. We need new ideas when we have a maturing staff and face what many other school systems face with declining enrollment. We will have new ideas and fresh blood and that will be great for the school system."

Political newcomer Ford gathered the highest number of votes in the school committee race in his first bid for elected office. Ford began his duties on the school committee Monday night.

The owner of Hallmark 100 Real Estate, Ford lived in Cohasset many years before moving and returning with his own business five years ago.

He had emphasized his teaching background and his business experience throughout his campaign for public office.

His primary goal, Ford said, "is to maintain the high quality of the Cohasset school system in the face of obvious fiscal constraints brought on by prop. 2 1/2. When we have to find solutions, I will look for creative avenues.

"I held out my credentials to the public, I did not run on specific issues," he continued. "My position is that I have the ability, based on 20 years of experience in teaching and research and serious experience as a businessman. It has given me the ability to give direction and guidance in the decision-making process."

Ford noted his single political advertisement, an insert in the Mariner was his most effective campaign tool. "And I had a lot of grassroots support," he said. "My family has been part of this town for the past 25 years. My brothers are here and we are very public service oriented."

Planning board incumbent Daniel Cotton, who emphasized his experience on the board, won re-election despite opposition from two candidates. Cotton earned 1,128 votes compared to 545 for political newcomer Robert Davenport and 468 for fire department captain Mark Trask.

Sharon Becker, chairman of the disposal area study committee, won a seat on the board of health. She gathered 1,261 in her first try at public office. Her opposition came from Matthew Sullivan, also a political novice who earned 745 votes in his first political campaign.

Ronald Goodwin, who has stressed the importance of preserving the town's watershed property, won a seat on the board of water commissioners. He gathered 1,462 votes in his first try for public office. Opponent Robert Jackson, a Cohasset police officer and former water commissioner, earned 582 votes.

The top vote getter of the day was Gerard Buckley, a Norwell police officer who ran unopposed for re-election to the recreation commission.

Other winners included the three library board of trustee incumbents, Barbara Power, Michelle Buckley, and Lucia Woods; assessor Thomas S. Duggan; sewer commissioner Frank C. DeSantis; and housing authority member John Muncey.

Stephen Wigmore was elected to fill a four-year unexpired term on the housing authority.

Selectmen suspend Central Market license

At their meeting Monday night, selectmen called for the suspension of the Central Market's alcoholic beverage license.

During their annual issuance of store licenses, selectmen asked Executive Secretary Don Andrew if the new market owners applied for a transfer of the license. When he answered no, selectmen determined the owners were operating illegally.

A clarification was offered by Town Counsel Richard Henderson who said after the sale of real estate or a change in the building, all licenses and permits held by the owners must be renewed or transferred. Henderson concurred that if there was no transfer of the license, the new Central Market owners are operating in violation and the license may be suspended.

Henderson was scheduled to check with the state Alcoholic Beverage Control Commission to review the proper procedure for suspending the license.

"They just don't care," Selectman Rocco Laugelle said angrily. "I want to suspend their license now and have a hearing on the matter in three weeks."

Selectman Clifford Mitman explained if the new owners are now operating without a transfer of the license, they are operating illegally.

The board voted to hold a hearing on the matter April 28. They also rejected the issuance of the market's food service license since the new owners have not applied for a transfer of that permit.

Executive Secretary Andrew said despite repeated attempts to contact the new owners, they have not returned the phone calls.

In relation to this discussion, Selectman Diane Sullivan suggested if an establishment fails to renew its licenses before its expiration but continues to operate the business, the fee of that permit will be doubled. The fee is set by the state, but town counsel ruled the town may decide whether to double that standard fee for late applicants.

The executive secretary suggested the new standard be applied to new owners who fail to apply for a license renewal but continue to operate the business.

"If these people do not renew their licenses in the interim but continue to operate, we say we will double the fee," Selectman Mitman clarified.

The motion made by Selectman Sullivan was unanimously approved.

Atty. Henderson told selectmen if they found an establishment in town operating without a license, they could order the business closed. Regarding the Central Market matter, Henderson suggested Town Constable Maria Pratt be dispatched to the store. She would notify the owners they may no longer sell alcoholic beverages until the April 28 public hearing, he said.

In other business, Selectman James Gallagher asked that action be taken against Cohasset Heights Ltd. landfill for the debris which accumulates along the reservation property on Rte. 3A from the commercial dump.

Gallagher, who likes to walk along the scenic Trustees of Reservations land along the highway, said nonbiodegradable plastic and mounds of paper products litter the open space. He asked selectmen to notify the landfill owners, and to demand a clean-up of the area.

"This has been going on for two years now," he said. "If someone else's trash had been blowing around, they'd be in jail by now. It's time to step on this problem. I would like to give them 30 days to respond and in their letter to selectmen, they should come up with ways to prevent this."

Selectman Mary Jane McArthur explained the trustees are a state group and local selectmen have no jurisdiction over that property. The only notification to Cohasset Heights would have to be sent by the trustees, she said.

"A couple of years ago I proposed sending a letter to the trustees because the town does not own that land. But if they don't complain, we have no jurisdiction," Selectman Laugelle said.

McArthur suggested the board write a letter to the trustees, asking what they plan to do about the deteriorating conditions of their Cohasset properties.

In other business, selectmen approved a weekday entertainment license for Hugo's Restaurant and the South Shore Music Circus, but postponed a decision on a Sunday license to the Music Circus.

Selectmen recalled the series of complaints issued last year by abutting residents regarding the late Sunday night shows and the obscenities uttered during those performances. The board members decided to wait until they see a list of the performers and times of the shows before they made a decision on the license.

Executive Secretary Andrew said he requested a list, but was refused until the owner, Ron Rawson, approved it.

"The residents have a liaison with the Music Circus and he is supposed to take this type of thing up with Mr. Rawson. That is the procedure to be followed," Selectman McArthur said. "But I want to see the program and the times before we grant the license."

Andrew also noted the Music Circus was paying the permit fee for Sunday entertainment, but "they are paying under protest." The Music Circus, he said, does not feel a Sunday entertainment license should be required in addition to a weekday license.

Health Board moves to close private landfill. . .

"Currently, leachate is being pumped back up on the landfill by a relatively newly constructed pumping station," he explained. "The leachate which is returned to the top of the fill eventually reaches the collection system again and at that time it has been characteristically changed."

He said that some of the constituents would tend to build up in the leachate and the amount leaking out into the groundwater would increase.

Beatty recommended removing the leachate from the site and discontinuing the recirculation process.

"The ground water is being recirculated until the town takes further action with respect to the proposals we've made," Cummings explained.

He explained John and Paul Barry, the owners and operators of the landfill, have proposed to treat leachate and groundwater separately.

"The leachate would be collected and handled in a different manner than contaminated ground water," Cummings explained. "We, acting in the benefit of the environment, have collected all the contaminated ground water.

"We now have it in tanks," he said, "and we're putting it back into the landfill."

He explained state and local agencies have hesitated in giving them permission to clean up the ground water and put it back in the ground.

"All the existing regulations have gotten us caught up in this little circle," he said.

"We came to the town and asked you to assign a portion of land that we can build a treatment facility for this contaminated ground water," Cummings told the board. "It seems kind of simple, but we can't move unless the regulators give us permission.

"In the meantime," he added, "there's general finger pointing at the landfill people saying, 'Guys, we want you to clean up your act, but don't ask us to help you.'

"The solution," he said, "is to look beyond and let us build our treatment plant."

That solution, or simply the removal of leachate and contaminated ground water, would allow the landfill to reopen.

Among the amendments to the site assignment, the board will require the Barrys to post a performance bond as financial insurance for the town.

The board will also require spot checks and reports of dumping materials, as well as scales for weighing trucks and wells for monitoring the water.

Finally, the board will require the landfill follow closure and post-closure guidelines when activity at the dump is finally finished.

Atty. Moehrke explained the board of health signed a written agreement in February 1985 which said the board would not seek to remove or modify the landfill's site assignment, unless major changes occurred.

"There was no new evidence presented at the hearing," Moehrke said. "This violates our agreement."

Before the hearing, Moehrke moved to disqualify Chairman Barbara Kern from participating in the hearing because of what he claimed was a conflict of interests.

He said Kern was named in a lawsuit against the landfill and that the board's decision could affect the litigation and benefit her financially.

Moehrke also requested a cross-examination of witnesses and explained that he wanted to cross-examine Kern concerning her alleged flip-flop regarding the landfill.

Kern stayed put and conducted the hearing. Moehrke did not cross-examine anyone.

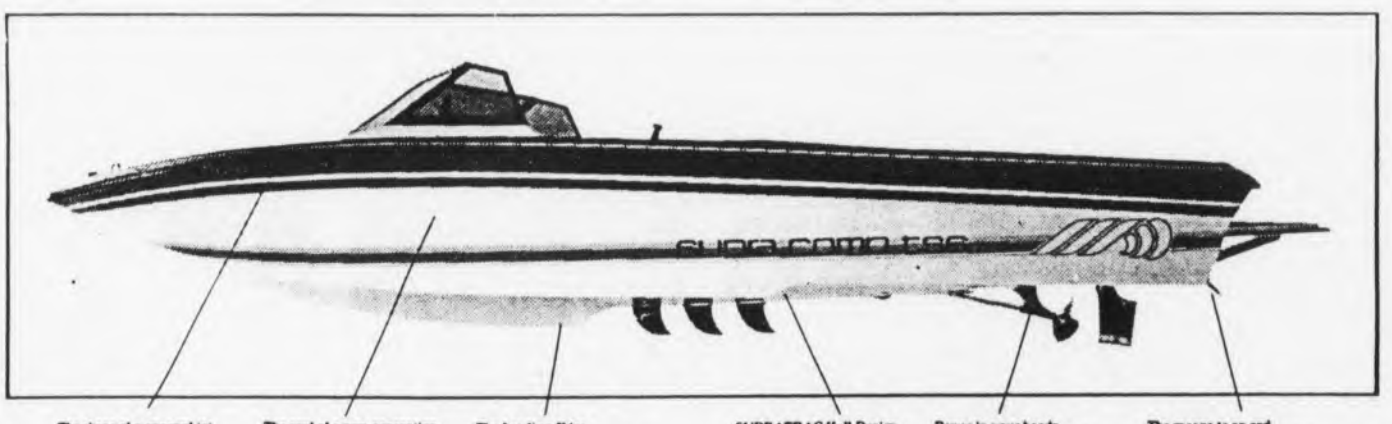
IT TAKES A LOT OF CONFIDENCE TO BREAK WITH TRADITION

From a proud heritage is born the shape of things to come. A whole new generation of competition ski boats.
For those who dare to ski a revolution. The Supra Comp TS6m.



The shape of a concord jet. A beautiful form that provides a more important function. Unobstructed visability from the moment you get on the throttle until the boat comes on plane.

The soul of a new generation. A mirror finish belies the strength and integrity of a unique composite structure. Kevlar, Coremat, biaxel glass and AME 6000 marine resin. The state of the science in laminate technology.

The Leading Edge. A distinctive Vee shape cuts the water. It turns a small chop into nothing at all and delivers an unbelievable performance even in the big water.

SUPRATRAC Hull Design. The revolutionary concept minimizes spray. Deep reverse chimes carve rails in the water. The three-point axis will nail you on course. The result is a feeling of control that never goes away.

Power in your hands. Three step levels at the drive train allow a 14° strut and eliminates turbulence around the 13x13 SupraCup prop. A decisive advantage for the demanding skier.

The means to an end. What it all comes down to is performance. A clean trailing edge and an infinitely adjustable cavitation plate let you fine tune the wake for the kind of skiing you are into.

The work begins

Town meeting is over, and the election is done. The town's spring housecleaning is complete.

Now that we have some breathing room, we can look back on what we have accomplished the past two weeks.

Town meeting required a maximum of 100 voters. But there were 366 of us the first day, and almost 200 Monday night.

There were good debates, sensible arguments and the business of the town was completed. After the dust has settled we find ourselves with, among other things, a new water resource district to protect our increasingly valuable water supply, and a new $138,000 pumper for the fire department. That will replace the one that was out of service five months last year. We also approved a new bylaw requiring the installation of water sprinkler systems in newly-constructed homes. Only two contractors spoke in opposition to that proposal which was approved with surprising ease. It may be one of those bylaws that will be opposed once it goes into effect when the real force is felt by developers and potential homeowners.

But as with all bylaws, the state attorney general must first approve the new bylaw. We must first wait and see that this proposal is in order.

We can sit back and rest, but only for a while. There is promise of a special town meeting in June, and even a hint of a special session in September. So enjoy the lapse, but understand it is only a momentary respite from our civic duties.

About 50 percent of the town's eligible voters cast their ballot in Saturday's election. That is a huge percentage considering this was simply a municipal election.

With surprising ease, the ballots were counted and the tabulation completed. In record time we had our winners.

There is a new addition to the board of selectmen. Jim Gallagher will spend the next three years sifting through more budget requests, dog restraint problems, employee raise requests, license and permit fees, and inter-department squabbles than he ever imagined. Jim's campaign emphasized his accessibility, his eagerness to listen to you and your concerns. Now is the time to turn talk into action, and Jim has three years to prove it.

Incumbent Cliff Mitman gathered a good number of votes in this election. Not bad for someone who had a difficult time deciding whether to run again. Cliff has proven himself as a proficient listener, one who remains sensible and coherent during the most difficult confrontations. He now has another three years to continue the work he began when the board first expanded to five members.

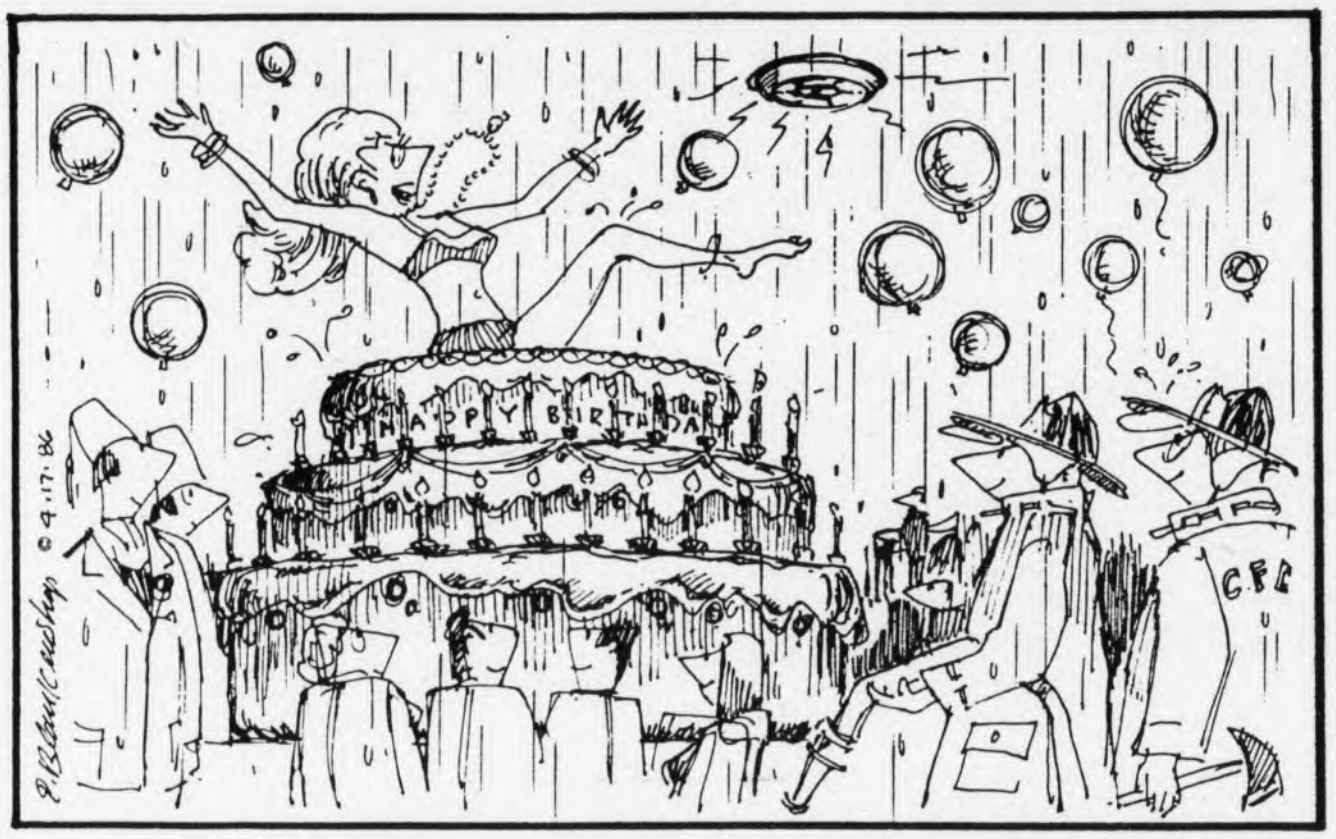
The school committee has added a new face to their membership. Christopher Ford, a longtime resident returned home, joined the board this week. He pulled in a majority of votes, quite an accomplishment for a first-time candidate in a crowded field.

Chris is a popular member of this community. He wants to bring his successful business acumen to the committee in its continuing efforts to maintain quality education in the face of tight fiscal control and declining enrollment.

Incumbent Diana Kornet is now the veteran on the school board. Judging from her vote total, many residents must be satisified with the way the committee has conducted itself for the past three years. Diana brings to the board a high level of common sense and a personal knowledge of what students desire and how teachers should respond. A mother of four and a teacher, Diana brings a needed perspective to the administrative side of education.

There are many more new members of town boards and committees. We wish them luck throughout their terms. We hope they continue to listen to their constituents and make all decisions fully aware of its effect on the entire community.

Fire Dept.—two engines, a ladder truck and the ambulance turn out for a birthday party—then turn right around, back to station. A birthday cake ablaze with candles set off smoke detector triggering alarm. Coincidentally, town meeting votes to require sprinkler systems in all new residences. First town in state to do so



". . . Hey you guys . . . no one said a word about Cohasset being the state's very first sprinkler town. . . !"

Getting the most of our tax dollars

To the Editor:

At town meeting June 1984, it was voted to sewer a certain area which included 3A business district and the contiguous residential area - an area the same as phase I of the Metcalf and Eddy plan. The cost to Cohasset of the collection system would have been 2.3 million, using realistic funding of 50 percent of construction cost.

Because a treatment plant and related pumping stations, outfall and large interceptor pipes would have been 90 percent funded, they would have cost us only $1 million more. We could have had the entire $14 million Metcalf & Eddy system with Phase I sewered area at a cost to Cohasset of 2.3 + 1 = $3.3 million - with excess capacity to expand the sewered area in the future if we chose to do so.

What will it cost Cohasset to sewer the area recommended by the Sewer Commission in June 1984 (say $2.3 million), and in addition buy a piece of the Hull plant, install a large interceptor pipe to Hull, and convert our existing plant to a pumping station? Probably at least another $million, after funding for a total of more than $3.3 million, depending upon how much Hull charges for a share of its Edsel. Remember that the Hull plant already has been funded, and Cohasset will not be funded for its share. In addition to the initial cost there will be an annual share of Hull's operating cost, as well as costs of pump station operators in Cohasset.

Of course, our sewer commission now wants to make the deal look a little less worse by cutting down on the sewered area. That's like paying full price for a share in the engine, drive train, body and chassis of a used Edsel, and saving a little by eliminating half the back seat, even if we then can carry fewer passengers in our share of the jalopy.

Well, all of this may make the no-growth element happy, but it shouldn't please anybody who likes to get the most value for his or her tax dollar. I say its a monument to shortsightedness and misinformation.

What should the town do? Engage a competent consultant, not necessarily M&E, but certainly not Ward Engineering, to reanalyze costs on the basis of realistic funding and escalation since previous estimates, and provide the town with realistically costed options from which a rational choice can be made. A choice that serves the long term best interests of the town, is based on rational use of competent fact finding by the consultant, and ignores impassioned rhetoric that can't withstand perceptive questioning. (Of course, there has to be perceptive questioning to exclude the nonsense.) All of the specious arguments against having our own adequate treatment plant should be lined up against the factual counter arguments. No solution is perfect, but one is less imperfect than the others.

Neither the sewer commission nor the selectmen seem likely to initiate this much needed reanalysis. There should be a citizen's petition, which would require 100 signatures. To be in time for the next town meeting, the petition and signatures would have to be submitted to the selectmen before May 14. A suggested text follows:

"To see if the town will appropriate $20,000 to reanalyze the cost of various options for providing sewer service to the area defined at Town Meeting, June 1984, using funding levels consistent with advice from the applicable state agency, and adjusting previously estimated costs for escalation and to incorporate any other cost information now available. Options are to include, but be not limited to, Metcalf & Eddy, Phase 1, and the Ward Plan with the same sewered area and purchasing a share of the Hull treatment plant. Technical features not approved by DEQE, such as 2" sewer lines, are to be excluded from consideration. Analysis to include estimated annual operating costs of each options, and average total annual cost to each property owner in each class (unsewered, newly sewered, or already sewered)."

Because it can make use of the data collected for previous studies, the reanalysis shouldn't cost more than $20,000. I'd call it taking another look before leaping into the Hull drain.

A summary of the results should be provided to the townspeople, perhaps via this newspaper, in advance of the next special town meeting. The results should not be colored by the personal preferences of the sewer commission or excused by claiming that a mandate already has been given. None of the money should be wasted on legal fees to invent such nonsence as "sewer service districts" in hopes of evading the rules for funding.

Gjesteby thanks her supporters

To the Editor,

I wish to thank all the people who supported my candidacy for selectman in the town election. It was invaluable for me to meet so many of our towns people in my campaign and I wish I could have visited with all of you.

Congratulations to Cliff Mitman and Jim Gallagher in their victories, and I especially want to thank Bill Weeks, Moderator, and Frances Marks, Town Clerk for a well run election day.

Old Pasture Road resident supports water district

To the Editor:

I refer to your article concerning my objection at the recent Cohasset Town Meeting regarding non residents and non registered voters addressing the meeting.

Your article gave the impression that I was against the article for the Water Resource District. Nothing could be further from the truth. I supported the article one hundred percent and was in complete agreement with the report and its objective.

My objection was only to make the point that in the future we do allow free speech at town meetings. This free speech should be allowed to those non residents and non registered resident voters of Cohasset. Mr. Campbell had important information, in the opinion of many, to speak in regards to the sewer situation. Certain people in attendance at that meeting, with selfish reasons prevented him from speaking. This was not done by standing up and being recognized but from their seat. This is not democracy in action. Mr. Campbell is a resident and a tax payer for over twenty five years.

The bylaw need not be changed. It is hoped that my recent action will allow us in the future to permit both sides of a question to be given by those who have intelligent information for all those attending town meeting to hear.

Thanks for a great Rotary race

On behalf of the Rotary Club and The Roadrace by the Sea Committee, we wish to express our most sincere gratitude to the people of Cohasset for again providing an atmosphere of warmth and encouragement to the over 800 runners. Special thanks to the Mariner for coverage of the race and promotional efforts. We also want to thank the Selectman, Police, Fire, Highway and Park Departments for providing services the entire town can be proud of.

The event could not have been successful without the efforts of Roy Fitzsimmons, John Muncey, Gene Crowell, Don Harrold, John Sadler and family. All proceeds from the Race will go toward our many in town commitments. Again special thanks to all the residents of Cohasset for being the warm encouraging people they are.

McNabb to run again

John K. McNabb Jr., a candidate for Selectman at the April 12 Cohasset Town Election, thanked his supporters and said he would run again for Selectman next year.

"I would like to thank everyone who supported my candidacy for Selectman," said McNabb. "Also, I would like to express my appreciation to every Cohasset citizen who got involved in campaigns this year and who turned out to vote."

"I feel I made a very good showing in my run for Selectman, and have a good basis to make a successful campaign next year," said McNabb. "The 1986 campaign was only a beginning."

"My greatest appreciation goes to my campaign committee, which worked very hard and effectively, and to my family, which was behind me all the way," said McNabb. "With this support to build on, I am very confident I can win in 1987."

Book speaker success

Joseph Osgood students were enthralled by a slide presentation and discussion of some of their favorite books by author, Carol Carrick, last Wednesday, April 9, at two separate assemblies.

Author Carol Carrick

Mrs. Carrick's appearance was sponsored by the Friends of the Paul Pratt Library and the PSO.

Marilyn Pope, Children's librarian at Cohasset's Public Library, introduced the popular writer, who winters in Martha's Vineyard and summers in Vermont. The children were interested that she wrote several of her books about her own son, Christopher. In fact, one of her most popular books, The Accident, is about the death of her son's dog. Mrs. Carrick's husband, Donald illustrates her work.

Some of the books discussed were: The Octopus, a beautifully illustrated natural science piece; Patrick's Dinosaurs, always a favorite subject of elementary school children; and, The Crocodiles Still Wait, which shows that the life style of the 50-foot crocodiles who were contemporaries of Tyrannosaurus Rex parallels that of the crocodiles we know today. A dramatic and suspenseful picture story book, warmly illustrated in earthtone water colors, and supported by terse but accurate scientific documentation.

Many thanks to the Friends of the Library and the PSO Arts Enrichment Committee for making Carol Carrick's appearance possible.

Peer Leadership at VoTech

Twenty-one students of South Shore Vocational Technical High School recently participated in a three day peer leadership program presented by Pathways to Health, a regional alcohol and drug primary prevention center.

The intensive workshop was designed to train students to become facilitators, advocates and leaders within the population of the school. The workshop was organized by South Shore Vo-Tech. Guidance Counselors Pamela Titus and John Kosko. Director of Training for Pathways Barbara Ganzer presented the program.

According to Ganzer, "Adolescents are experimenting with drugs and alcohol at an earlier age than ever before and therefore encountering serious health, emotional and social problems. One all too common result has been that adolescents learn about drug and alcohol use from their peers who may encourage and promote use."

"The role of a peer leader," noted Titus," is that of a guide, a student who is a reassuring role model. The use of a peer leadership is based on the belief that some young people may relate better to their own peers than to adults. An essential part of being a peer leader is being able to be an effective communicator and educator."

She also stated, "We have found that many of our students were willing to invest the time and effort to help another student but they needed formal training. Barbara Ganzer and Pathways to Health provided our students with the necessary training."

South Shore Vocational Technical High School is a regional school system serving the students from the towns of Abington, Rockland, Hanover, Norwell, Hanson, Whitman, Cohasset and Scituate.

Rev. John Keohane finds a happy home in Cohasset

By John O'Donnell
Mariner Staff

He has served in Florida, Alaska, Germany and Viet Nam, but the Rev. John Keohane is happy to be in Cohasset.

"We have wonderful people in this parish," said Fr. Keohane, pastor of St. Anthony's Church. "Cohasset is a very nice place to be."

Fr. Keohane has served a variety of people in his years as a priest. He has been an Air Force chaplain, a prison chaplain, a mental hospital chaplain, and a university chaplain before coming to St. Anthony's.

"I find it amusing to look back at all the places I've been," said Keohane. "I've worked with all types of people."

I enjoy being a parish priest," he said. "I enjoy being with people of all ages. In the Air Force, you never see any people over 40 years old."

Fr. Keohane said that parishioner involvement is vital to the church.

"With the shortage of priests in the Catholic Church, we have to have lots of assistance from people," he said. Fortunately, the people of St. Anthony's have given us help.

"We have eucharistic ministers, ushers, cantors and lectors," Fr. Keohane said. "And most important of all we have collectors," he grinned.

"One of the blessings of having a shortage of priests is that more people have a chance to participate in the church," said Fr. Keohane. "I think we would still have participation of lay people at St. Anthony's no matter how many priests we have."

Fr. Keohane and Associate Pastor Fr. Joseph Ryan serve the 750 families in St. Anthony's parish. In the summer, Sr. Mary Frances Hurld will become a full-time member of the staff.

"Sr. Mary Frances will become our full-time choir director and organist," Fr. Keohane said. "At present she is on the staff at Notre Dame Academy in Hingham.

"She'll be a welcome addition to parish programs," he said. "Good organists are hard to come by."

Jean Lennon oversees the religious education program. "We have a very successful program," said Fr. Keohane. "Most classes are conducted in the homes, and it seems to be a better atmosphere for kids to learn."

Fr. Keohane hasn't found it difficult to become a parish priest after being an Air Force chaplain. "Both Fr. Ryan who also is a former military chaplain, and myself were involved with parish work before we became chaplains," he said.

"One of the benefits of being a chaplain is that you get to work closely with ministers of other faiths," said Fr. Keohane. "We usually shared a facility with chaplains of other denominations."

"In twenty years in the service, I was sent nine or ten different places," Fr. Keohane said. "It's nice to stay in one place now."

In addition to serving in the military, Fr. Keohane served as chaplain at Florida State University, and at the federal penitentiary in Tallahassee.

"In the 1950s Boston had a lot of priests," Fr. Keohane said. "I was sent to Florida to serve. Working with young people was rewarding, but my work in the penitentiary could get quite frustrating at times."

Fr. Keohane said he is happy with his work. "It's a privilege to be doing the Lord's work," he said. "We're not doing the Lord any favors by doing His work. "We're the recipient of his favors."

Fr. Keohane has just one goal left. "The next thing I'd like to do is be a chaplain to a golf course," he said.

Barbara Pape Boy Scout fundraising drive continues

Barbara Pape, a strong supporter of Cohasset Boy Scout Troop 28, died recently at age 41. At the time of her death, she was Chairperson of the Troop 28 Country Fair, the annual fund raising activity of the Cohasset Boy Scouts.

Although Barbara was a Scituate resident, she had enrolled her son John, in Troop 28 where he advanced to the highest rank in Scouting, an Eagle. John remains active in supporting the Cohasset Boy Scouts and is President of Cohasset Explorer Post 28.

Troop 28 lost a tremendous friend and supporter of Cohasset Boy Scouting. The Troop Committee voted unanimously to establish a scholarship fund in her memory. A memorial scholarship is a particularly fitting tribute to Barbara in view of her commitment to the continuing educational pursuits of her children, John and Wendy.

One or more annual scholarships will be awarded to Cohasset Boy Scouts or Explorers who continue to actively support Troop/Post 28 through graduation from high school. Scouts going on to college or vocational schools will be eligible.

It is anticipated that every fifth year, a fund drive will be conducted to protect the principal against inflation. Other Friends of Troop 28 may, from time to time, be added to the Honor Roll of this Scholarship Fund.

The Boy Scouts' goal is to raise $10,000 by May 31. Tax deductible contributions may be made to the: Troop 28 Memorial Scholarship, c/o Cohasset Savings Bank, 13 Elm Street, Cohasset, MA 02025, Att: Robert Magner.

Drop-in art classes

What to do during April vacation? Send your child to the South Shore Art Center's vacation drop in art program offered in the communities of Cohasset, Norwell and Hingham.

From April 22 to April 25 the drop in will be held at the Center, 103 Ripley Road in Cohasset; at the Hingham Community Center; and at the First Parish Church Hall in Norwell Center. The Center has been able to bring its children's program out to other communities through the generosity of grants from the Jospeh Drown Foundation and the Hingham and Norwell Arts Lottery Councils.

The vacation drop-in allows children to leisurely drop in on a daily basis between 10:30 a.m. and noon to work on art projects. The youngsters, ages seven to twelve work with painting, drawing, collage, clay, mixed media, etc. The staff of the Center's young artist department teach the program.

For more information on this program and directions to the various locations, call the South Shore Art Center, 383-9548.

Dog rabies clinic April 26

The Standish Humane Society will conduct a rabies clinic for dogs on Saturday, April 26, from 10 a.m. to noon behind the Scituate Town Hall, Chief Justice Cushing Highway, Route 3A, Scituate. The clinic will be held rain or shine.

Kenneth Roberts of the Animal Clinic on Wheels of Pembroke will be the veterinarian. The fee will be $5 per shot. It is not necessary to be a Scituate resident to attend the clinic. Cohasset residents are welcome, as there will be no Cohasset rabies clinic this year.

Proof of a current rabies vaccination is required by state law to obtain a dog license, and the 1986 dog licenses are presently available. The Scituate town clerk will be at the rabies clinic to license local dogs if desired.

Dogs must be four months old to recieve a rabies shot. Dogs less than one year will need their second rabies shot in one year. For dogs over one year, the rabies vaccine is effective for three years.

Standish Humane Society is an all-volunteer, non-profit organization serving the pets and people of the South Shore. In 1985, the Humane Society placed 600 cats and kittens and 350 dogs and puppies in new homes. Twelve hundred dogs and cats were spayed or neutered in 1985 in the Humane Society's low cost spay-neuter program.

Monster flea market May 24

The Cohasset Historical Society will present its 1986 version of the annual Lothrop House Flea Market Saturday, May 24.

This annual event, for which the Society has been accumulating and collecting good used items since its last fall yard sale, promises to be one of the best yet as the Society's popular flea market event kicks off another summer of activity at the Caleb Lothrop House. The Historical Society, over the past several years, has achieved a certain local fame for the diversity of its flea market offerings.

Though its "flea-market barn" already is packed, the Society still is accepting donations of good useable items to add to its inventory.

If you are cleaning out your attic, cellar or garage and would like to help the Society by contributing saleable flea market items, call 383-0773 or 383-6930. Watch for additional information about this unique and gala event.

All proceeds from the Historical Society's spring Flea Market will go towards maintaining the Society's three historical buildings and its community programs.

Dealer spaces will be available again this year.

Landscape artist workshop

Landscape architect Mary Smith comes to the South Shore Art Center to give a workshop on "Color in the Garden: The Art of Seeing."

This workshop Wednesday evening April 16 is the second in a three-part mini-series, "Design for Living" which explores the concept of art expressed through many different forms. Smith's workshop begins at 7:30 p.m. at the Center, 103 Ripley Road in Cohasset. Advanced registration is required.

She will concentrate on how to create a uniqueness in the garden by using color and textures effectively in landscape design. Smith is the principle of Mary A. Smith Associates, landscape architects. Her current projects include West Palm Beach Pavillion, Marina Bay in Quincy and the Great Woods Performing Center in Mansfield. She has a masters degree in landscape architecture from the Harvard School of Design.

For the last program in the series, Wednesday, April 23, interior designer Gail Bertocchi will discuss "Creating Your Interior--1986." Whether decorating for the first time or refurbishing for the 100th, current ideas and information will help turn your environment into a distinctive design. Bertocchi of Gail Bertocchi Interiors will discuss current design trends in flooring, walls,furniture and windows and explain how to use American Williamsburg, French and English designs in tune with 1986. She designed for the Junior League Show House at the Endicott Estate in Dedham and has been published in the Home Decorating Quarterly of House Beautiful.

The Design for Living series is funded by the Joseph Drown Foundation and the Marion Huse Memorial Fund. For registration call the South Shore Art Center, 383-9548.

Museum tour at museums

The Cohasset Historical Society and Cohasset Recreation Department will hold their annual spring co-sponsored tour of the Historical Society's two museum buildings at Cohasset Center at 11 a.m. Friday, May 16. Cohasset and area residents are invited.

This special pre-summer season tour of the Society's museums will visit the Maritime Museum and the Captain John Wilson House on Elm Street, and this spring tour marks the fifth year of the combined tours sponsored by the Recreation Department and Historical Society. The Captain John Wilson Historical House contains a collection of antique home furnishings, furniture, kitchenware, childrens' toys, and artworks donated to the Society from other early homes of the town.

The house was built in the year 1810 by housewright David Nichols for Capt. John Wilson, a Cohasset Sea Captain. The Maritime Museum, a mid-1700's ship chandlery originally owned by the Bates family, contains numerous artifacts, models, documents, prints and paintings relating to Cohasset's seafaring past during America's "Age of Sail". Including are relics from some of the many local shipwrecks, also equipment and gear from the town's 19th century fishing fleets, and the stories of Minot's Ledge Lighthouse and of local volunteer lifesavers.

The Maritime Museum also contains, on its second floor, an extensive collection of general historical artifacts from early Cohasset. These collections range from stone tools of the Indians to early carpenters' and cordwainers' equipment, and a diversity of other items of historical interest. Each of the Society's buildings is unique and each portrays part of the historical heritage of this small New England seafaring town.

To register for this special guided tour of the Historical Society's museums please call the Cohasset Recreation Department office at 383-6791. A $1 donation will be requested at the time of the tour; the donation will be for the benefit of the Historical Society. This special and unusual tour will meet at the Maritime Museum, Elm Street, Cohasset Center.

Domestic violence education funds asked

By Mary Mahoney
Mariner Staff

Domestic violence is a social problem riddled with denial. Communities deny it - "It doesn't happen here," leaders insist. Victims are often ashamed to admit it and become isolated and fearful. Abusers refuse to take responsibility for their aggressive behavior and justify their right to commit acts of violence against their mates.

But, says Joan Stiles, coordinator for volunteers at the South Shore Women's Center, the problem of domestic violence is beginning to turn around. The force for change has come about as women, the primary targets of sexual abuse and violence in the home, learn about their legal rights.

Stiles says however, that the empowerment of women is only the first step in halting the destructive cycle of abuse.

"Things are changing very gradually but it's all a matter of community education."

Toward that end, the SSWC has submitted petition articles on town meeting warrants in several area towns asking for funds to carry out education programs.

Later this month in Marshfield, town meeting voters will be asked to approve an appropriation of $2,500. During Hanover's town meeting which begins May 5, voters will be asked to consider a $1,500 request under article 70.

In Pembroke, the third Mariner town in the 10-town area served by SSWC, the request for funds will come at the 1987 annual town meeting since the petition article failed to make the warrant deadline this year.

The center, a non-profit organization funded by the state Dept. of Social Services, has been serving the South Shore from an office in Plymouth for the past six years.

Stiles said money appropriated at town meetings will be used in the individual towns for educational training programs and outreach work. The goal of the group is to raise community awareness about attitudes which lead to violence and abuse and to help victims of domestic violence.

One of their education plans is to conduct workshops for high school students in grades nine through 12.

Last year, Stiles recalled, a state grant enabled SSWC to bring a play about domestic violence to Marshfield, Silver Lake and Plymouth schools.

"What we found were appalling attitudes already being formed among young people regarding the acceptability of violence in relationships."

Stiles said the most important aim of education programs is to try to change faulty attitudes so that abusive situations will not be inherited by future generations.

"We need to educate young men about alternative behavior to violence and to educate young women of their rights."

"One of the biggest problems is the social stigma for women, especially in the more affluent communities."

The universal community reaction to the problems of domestic violence, Stiles said, is always the same: "It doesn't happen here."

"There is that tendency to believe that it is a low-income problem."

But Stiles explained that abuse within families occurs on every socio-economic level, among every race and ethnic group.

"There are no typical victims and no typical abusers. Statistically, there's no difference between a bank president and a blue-collar laborer."

Stiles said this is the first year individual communities are being asked for funds. The need, she noted, is highlighted by the number of women from various towns served by SSWC in 1985.

Last year 33 women from Hanover were aided by the group. Services and resources were also provided to 72 women in Pembroke and 109 in Marshfield. In Plymouth, where SSWC is highly visible, 1056 women were served last year.

"It's not just the population difference," Stiles said, responding to the disparity in the numbers. "We're also well-known in Plymouth."

The organization's low profile in other communities limits the number of victims who could be helped but aren't. The women's center currently must rely on referrals from other agencies and word-of-mouth to make its services known and to aid those who need assistance.

"We feel the numbers of people served would be much higher if we were better known in area towns," Stiles said.

According to national government statistics, one woman is abused every 18 seconds. The alarming rate of battered women is what prompted psychologist Jim Hardeman to organize SSWC in 1978.

Stiles said Hardeman found a growing number of victims of domestic violence during his counseling practice but no resources for them in the South Shore area.

Now many intervention and support services are available through the center, but Stiles insists there are still too many women not getting help.

"One of the biggest problems is the social stigma for women, especially in the more affluent communities. This is why we want to promote community education," Stiles said. "When a community is educated, victims are apt to come out from behind closed doors to seek the help they need."

Recently the Kingston finance committee voted 9 to 1 to recommend approval of a $1,500 appropriation for SSWC education programs in that community.

The Marshfield finance committee is recommending town meeting voters turn down the funding request.

"They favored our project but it is their policy not to back non-local proposals," Stiles explained.

Duxbury voters, at their March 10 town meeting, also voted 124 to 107 against the funding. Stiles said that action was taken on the recommendation of the finance committee.

"The committee was strongly against it. It was their feeling this would set a precedent, opening the door to other charities and non-profit organizations."

Cutbacks in state aid to cities and towns as well as to groups like the women's center, Stiles warned, is a trend that will force more local financing of social programs.

"Communities will have to face the fact that they're going to have to deal with some of their own local problems with their own money."

The Hanover Advisory Committee plans to meet with officials of the South Shore Women's Center on April 23 at 8 p.m. at town hall to discuss the warrant article petition.

Golden co-sponsors senior citizen legislation

State Senator Golden (D-Norfolk/Plymouth) has co-sponsored, along with the Silver-Haired Legislature, several pieces of legislation designed to benefit seniors.

Senate Bill 1550 would provide an unearned income deduction for persons over 65 years old; Senate Bill 1516 would amend the Homestead Protection Act to include widows and widowers, and single individuals over 65 years old an exemption from execution on their residence in an amount up to $100,000.

Senate Bill 1583 would provide a subsidy to elderly residents over 65 years old to maintain ownership of their homes; and Senate Bill 1465 would allow persons 60 to 64 years old who become a state or municipal employee the option of joining the contributory retirement system.

"I am pleased to be able to co-sponsor these measures along with the Silver-Haired Legislature," stated Senator Golden. "The passage of these bills would benefit our elderly citizens by providing them with some key benefits.The Silver-Haired Legislature is to be commended once again for addressing the needs of elderly citizens in the Commonwealth."

After 10 years at shipyard, Dave starts over

(Editor's Note:

The author, Dave Cilley, walked into the Mariner's Weymouth office and asked if we would like him to write a personal account of what it has been like for him to be laid off from the Quincy shipyard.

A week later he was back with a poignant and perceptive first-person reflection on his 10 years at the yard.

At 34, Dave, a Weymouth resident for 28 years, must start over.

Having gone through the Weymouth school system, WHS Class of '69, he has a B.A. in English Literature from the Univ. of New Hampshire. The shipyard is not the place his education prepared him for.

"I grew up near the yard...it was the local industry", he explains. Part-time employment before and between his college years, resulted in his "ending up there".

They give you enough money to keep you there," as he puts it.

Like many of his fellow workers, he has now applied to the yards in Portsmouth, N.H. and Bath, Maine, but "if nothing comes through, I'd like to do some writing."

He's off to a strong start with this piece.

I was recently laid off from General Dynamics shipyard after ten years service as a rigger. Many of my friends were picked off by layoffs before me, like soldiers in a battle not to be replaced.

For many, a sense of security has been replaced by empty feelings. Loss of money, friends, and purpose puts us on the spot in a state where unemployment at 3.7% is the lowest nationally. We wonder how an injured Red Sox second baseman makes $500,000 this year for not even playing. We figure Lee Iacocca will make his 1.6 million again this year. No problem. But where did our shipbuilding industry go?

As the T A K X naval contract winds down at G.D., stacks of 40 foot long steel plates have disappeared into weeds. Giant yellow boom cranes that look like monsters from Orson Welles' War of the Worlds have lumbered to creaky stops. The roar of chipping guns chiseling welding slag off steel, the banging of sledge hammers on bulkheads, the arc of welders, and spark showers from burning torches have all diminished to barely discernible levels.

People who have never worked at the shipyard do not understand the land of 600 foot-long buildings, imposing cranes, strange noises and massive smoke clouds that hang like smog over the ships in summer.

For example, many people think shipyard workers don't work very hard and may even get to sleep at work. Wrong. No lazy group of people could produce a ship 900 feet long that weighs thousands of tons. Our ships don't sink in the harbor. They pass sea trials and are delivered on time.

A shipyard is one of the most smoky, dusty, loud places you can work. Conditions can be hectic, an ant farm of interaction between hundreds of shipfitters, welders, riggers, burners, electricians and others. Each trade has its tools and materials that must organize and feed into the ship's construction. As burner Joe Cheverie says, "Its like building a skyscraper laying down on its side, with rooms, elevators, machinery. You name it."

The job involves dangerous staging work and an atomosphere laced with paint fumes, welding smoke, fiberglass, sand blast dust and ground steel particles that give shipbuilding a much higher incidence of lung cancer than normal. But yard workers like their jobs and feel pride in their efforts.

Pride enabled yard workers to survive dangerous conditions, management stress, and severe weather conditions. Certainly the steel absorbs the season, roaring hot in summer, permafrost cold in winter. Many a beard or mustache have I seen covered with snow and icicles on a ten degree day with a thirty-knot gale whipping through.

I remember red faces on days I thought my feet were going to get frostbite. When I felt I was surviving minute to minute in the coldest winter deep freeze, I would always wonder how a welder could kneel down on a steel deck and weld for most of eight hours. Courage, pride, paychecks.

As as shipyard worker, a rigger, most of my energy was spent out doors any time of day or night, as rotating shifts were not uncommon.

The job title, "rigger", bears explanation. Seldom could anyone at the shipyard explain a rigger's job to the public. Simply put, I used chainfalls and cranes, even the blue sawhorse Goliath crane standing over 300 feet high, to move heavy objects. Moving a 100 ton ship's component unit, 5 ton steel plates, I beams, galvanized pipe, pallets, or diesel machinery are examples of rigger work. Handling heavy nylon lines while moving a ship from one spot in the yard to another was also rigger duty.

"So you operated a crane", the public asks. No I didn't. The crane operators did that, guys like Gordie Kerr of Weymouth, Tom Asack of Brockton, Jimmy Bates of Quincy, and Roger Nichols of Rhode Island. All are fifty years of age or less, with ten to twenty years experience, also gone to layoffs. They sat in crane cabs 60 feet above ground, operating mechanical levers and controls for braking, hoisting, boom swing, and crane travel along sets of railroad tracks spaced thirty feet apart. They were dependable for their expertise when a few inches of uncalculated movement by the crane hoist could mean a severed limb, broken bone or worse. They were people you would be glad to know, especially if you were a rigger.

It was rigger's duty to work with the EMTs to rescue injured workers from tanks, bow, engine rooms or other spots most quickly accessible by crane and safety stretcher. Lifesaving was one area the rigger-crane operator liason became crucial.

In my opinion, riggers were greyhounds who set the shipyard in motion. They combined strength, agility, decisiveness, and climbing abilities of a monkey. Rigger's gear consisted, in part, of wire chokes, pallet bars, shackles, eye bolts, rope slings, good sense and muscle.

Many a stong backed rigger would have a gear box loaded with three or four chainfalls, gnarled wire chokes, beam clamps and shackles that would clang and jangle if dropped on the deck.

Delivering the ship's smokestack to the deckhouse, so a ship fitter could scribe it in place, is an instance of rigging work.

The ships were a continum of buzzing, hums, and

Young People's Summer Theater sets final schedule

The Young People's Summer Theatre has announced its summer schedule is set and that the program will officially begin June 2.

Director Don Capen confirmed the registration meeting for the program will be Monday, June 2, at 7 p.m. at the First Trinitarian Congregational Church in Scituate.

Auditions for placement will be Saturday and Sunday, June 7 to 8 from 6 to 10 p.m., also at the church. Additional registration will also be held at this time.

The program is open to youths between 13 and 22 years-old from Scituate and any other town. There is a non-refundable registration fee of $25 ($20 if mailed in prior to June 1).

Since 1977, YPST has presented 16 musical productions. This summer, the group has presented its 10th anniversary with two shows. July 31, Aug. 1 and 2, the Broadway musical "Sugar," based on the famous film "Some Like It Hot," will be presented.

A week later, Aug. 8 and 9, a 10th anniversary gala musical celebraton will be presented as a retrospect of all of YPST's productions.

In addition to the members of the Sugar cast, previous YPST members, from as far back as the first season, will join the group to perform on those evenings. Both productions will be presented at Scituate High School.

In addition to Capen, the staff will include assistants Kim Karlberg, formerly of Scituate, and Peter Law, who has worked for YPST since 1981.

Returning after a four year absence will be choreographer Michele Pecoraro, and Peter Tolan, former Scituate resident and YPST founder, will return as master of ceremonies for the gala celebration.

Capen will also serve as emcee. Karol Hommen is returning as music director.

Any youth interested in joining YPST should attend the June 2 meeting, or request information and registration forms to mail in by writing P.O. Box 41 as soon as possible.

Further information can be obtained by calling 871-5831.

roaring from air movers, welding machines, compressed air socket and chipping guns, slag and sledge hammers, and electrical boxes. I always wore ear muffs.

The engine room was always smoky, noisy, bustling. Former rigger Ed Brown of Weymouth claims his sinuses were damaged from the smoke and dust. Couldn't smell anything.

Amidst the din and exhaust, an engine room scene might portray a rigger leaning off a wooden ladder fifteen feet above a catwalk. At the end of his precariously stretched form he holds a chainfall he will hook into a welded padeye. His job is to erect a steel ladder, platform, or pipe. Determination outshines the dirt on his face. He too is proud to be working, bringing home a paycheck.

The security of that moment is to be working. The job will expire. His name will soon also be written on a layoff slip. He realizes that his employer has to live down suggestions that it defrauded the government with cost overruns, inaccurate bookkeeping, and the Veliotis' kickback scandal. He wonders if his own country is more interested in subsidizing shipbuilding in South Korea and Brazil. Subsidies were needed and not approved. We weren't Nicaraguan Contras after all.

Company policy with the government, with its own employees, seemed careless over the past five years. Many were fired for not wearing hard hats or safety glasses every minute. Some were suspended for putting tools away a minute before the whistle, despite a solid day's work.

Pride was a shipyard worker's best friend in combating the worst in weather, tough discipline policies, environmental hazard, and most importantly the odds of a dwindling commercial and naval shipbuilding market.

Security through a job, a paycheck, and a sense of accomplishment is the void to be faced and filled by many laid off General Dynamics employees. Many are sad from the loss of friends. All are concerned to replace paycheks and security. Some are angry. Some are bewildered at a world that does not include shipyards. Some are glad to break away. For some, dreams have been shattered, exposing them to a very competitive economy.

Steven White, from Plymouth, was a maintenance mechanic at G.D. "Its pretty sad to leave after 21 years. I miss alot of nice people I met there." White, now 43 adds, "I liked my job. There was a variety of things I did in yard maintenance. Its not like standing at a lathe in a machine shop. Starting over at my age is the worst part."

Ronnie Thomas 39, a shipfitting foreman from Somerset, reviews his layoff. "It was a shock! I miss the friends I made, the money and benefits."

Eddie Madden, 42, from South Boston, was a transporter driver on the second shift. "It's very depressing when you put in seventeen and a half years of your life and it goes kaput. I miss the comraderie."

Tom Larrivee, also from Somerset, is a former shipfitter and now job placement councilor for G.D. He is 37. He states, "I spent fifteen years there. My dreams are shattered. I went through an apprecticeship. I was gonna make it my lifelong livlihood. But at least I have a skill I can fall back on." He pauses, then adds, "You can't beat the money and benefits. There's no place like a shipyard for security for your family."Larrivee is in the mainstream for one thing he'll miss most. "I miss the people I worked with . You work with a guy for ten or fifteen years. Now, maybe you'll never see him again. Its sad."

Some, like burner Joe Cheverie whose father was a burner for 45 years before him, had symbolically begun to "pass the torch" to his son, until the yard closing set in. Cheverie, now also a job placement councilor for laid off workers, ponders. "Its sad, I was there 28 years. I liked the job, made a living. I have a son in college and a daughter in private school. The sad part is that the 40 to 50 year old guys don't know what they're going to do. Skills they have from the yard they don't want outside, I'll miss everybody I work with."

Others like Brockton's Tom "Fish" Salmons are more Spartan in their outlook. Salmons,a burly hard worker who stomps around like a cavemen, states his mind. "I have two things to say about the shipyard. I miss my friends. I miss the money. As far as management is concerned, I have no comment."

John Buckley, 31, a welder marker from Weymouth, is seemingly glad to escape. "I don't miss anything about it."

The wife of one laid off worker speaks about her husband. "He's either in the house all the time or in the bar. There are no jobs to pay what they were payin' at the yard."

Dave Martinson, a Friar Tuck-like yard worker with a knack for singing Harry Chapin tunes, had this to say. "I'm gonna miss the people. I'm not gonna miss the job. But I do hate to see the job go because it shows all our heavy industry is going overseas. The indicator is the Japanese coming over here to show our men how to bend steel. The industry is dying out and all our knowledge and trade skills will be going with it. We didn't learn anything from Pearl Harbor. Its a lesson soon forgotten."

I, too, miss the friends, money, and security. And I miss the comic relief and good humor that emerges so often in an environment as harsh and disciplined as a shipyard.

Many shipyard images and memories of scenic views across the islands of Quincy Bay, the mudflats of Weymouth, and the stellar lights of Boston will always stay with me.

I remember frosty winter nights looking out under the Fore River bridge, across darkened ice water to the distant shimmer of lights in Hull.

I remember standing on the ship's helicopter deck, ten stories high, peering towards Boston's compact skyline or the developed hills of Quincy and Braintree.

I remember eating summer lunches upon the mossy piers of the shipyard, watching the ocean boil with blue fish chasing pogeys.

I remember the waves bouncing off the docks from passing tugs, ships, and pleasure boats.

I'll remember the shipyard cats walking around, sea gulls swooping, the smell of the bay, the sight of sixty foot high sheets of water blowing along the bay in front of the hulking Edison plant during hurricane Gloria last September.

I'll miss not going up in the cab of the Goliath crane some night and again seeing the lights of the Framingham mall and the city street lights of Quincy that look like the landing approach to an airport from the lofty height.

Images of lines at time clocks, fork lifts and trucks zooming around, long corrugated aluminum and brick buildings with smoke smudged windows, visions of basins, piers, and superstructures will stay with me. It was a steel zoo.

I can still see stubble faced old timers, forebearers of better times, prodding along in arthritic limps, victims of too many shipyard winters.

From my earliest days, I remember seeing those massive grey battleships moored at the yard's most northern pier. They were part of a tradition now going back one hundred and one years to Mr. Watson's farm on the Fore River. I thought that tradition would continue.

We all now become expatriates of shipbuilding. Auld Lang Syne has been playing for some time now for the men and women at General Dynamics. Hundreds, and now thousands of workers, partners and friends, have heard its melody as each one's position in the line to the gangplank of layoffs has shortened and finally been realized.

Good luck to them all.

Spring sports - All teams begin season

By Lisa Shumaker
Mariner Correspondent

The boys' opened their season last Wednesday with a good showing against a tough Norwell team.

Coach Jon Anderson was pleased with his team's performance and was happy to score a few points against such talented competition. Although the boys came away with a loss, Anderson feels the meet showed the Skippers have the potential to be competitive in the league.

John Hall picked up Cohasset's only first in the meet as he won the 100-yard dash. John also placed second in the shot and discus.

Geoff Christensen, Eric Wagner, Ned Chase, Mike Smith and Mark McManus all picked up seconds, while Jim Reidy, Joel Reidy and Ian Smart all had thirds.

Monday the boys face Abington in what should be a competitive meet. Wednesday, Cohasset takes on Hanover at Milliken Field.

GIRLS' TRACK

In their first meet, the girls lost to an overwhelming talented Norwell team. However, according to coach Claire Brady, all the girls performed well, and the team as a whole scored more points than Brady expected. Overall, Brady was pleased with the effort the Skippers put out and feels they will be competitive in almost every meet they enter this season.

Liz O'Leary picked up a first in the 100-yard dash and placed second in the 880. Nancy Riley also had a great day placing first in the discus.

Jan Coley, Caitlin Stanton, and Laurel Collins all had seconds in their respective events. While third places went to seventh graders Jan Plante and Maureen Lang.

This week the girls have a shot at beating Abington on Monday. Thursday, the Skippers are favored to come out on top against Hanover.

SOFTBALL

Tuesday, the girls suffered a crushing blow as they were beaten decisively by Sandwich. The Skippers had one bad inning in which a lapse in pitching led to a 12 run inning for Sandwich. Unfortunately, it was just one of those games in which nothing went right.

Leslie McGee did a good job as relief pitcher for Cohasset and led the team through the final five innings successfully. Catcher Toni Cann put in a good effort behind the plate. Cindy Spooner had a few hits to lead the team on offense.

Thursday, the girls traveled to East Bridgewater and lost 8-3. However, the team showed remarkable improvement over Tuesday's game. Behind the excellent pitching of Toni Cann, the Skippers tightened up their defense and kept their errors to a minimum.

In the field, Debbie Hartley and catcher Margie Murphy played well. Kristin Ellinger had a strong game at bat for Cohasset.

GIRLS' TENNIS

After being rained out Tuesday and Thursday, the girls were a little rusty (no pun intended) when they faced the powerhouse Scituate Friday and were defeated 5-0. Coach Sue Dalrymple was impressed with the strength of Scituate, but feels Cohasset has a chance at beating this team if the girls toughen up mentally and the doubles teams come through.

The first doubles team consisting of Katie Ryan and Jen Chapman played very well, coming back strong in the second game. Number one player Kerri Kirkendall also turned in a good effort for the Skippers.

Monday, the girls crushed Hanover 4-1. Dalrymple was especially happy with the way her team bounced back from the disappointing loss on Friday. Dalrymple was also impressed with the way in which each player was able to adjust to the absence of number one player Kerri Kirkendall.

Carolyn O'Brien and Jen Chapman both played exceptionally well and won their matches. The two doubles teams of Katie Ryan and Chantalle Stone, along with Lee Sullivan and Karin Anglin also picked up victories.

This week the girls face Sandwich on Wednesday and Norwell on Thursday. Cohasset must win both of these matches in order to keep its playoff hopes alive.

BASEBALL

The boys had a tough week losing to East Bridgewater Thursday, 5-2. Coach Joe Bouchard was very pleased with his team's flawless defense, but in the seventh inning East Bridgewater rallied from a 2-1 deficit to take the lead for good.

Sean Corkery pitched an excellent game, but unfortunately was unable to pull out the victory. Todd Fitzpatrick played outstanding defense as shortstop making several spectacular and crucial stops. Bobby Shultz scored the Skipper's only two runs.

Friday, the boys lost to a potential league champion, Sandwich, 3-0. Bouchard attributes the defeat to his team's failure to hit. Bouchard holds his defense in the highest esteem, but he feels Cohasset will have to work on its hitting and on making the most of its scoring opportunities.

Pitcher Mike Gautile threw well for Cohasset giving up a mere three runs.

Seahawks Squirt B1 cap off a great year

By Robby Robinson
Special to the Mariner

By beating Milton twice by identical 3-1 score, the Seahawk Squirt B 1 youth hockey team capped a spectacular 31-6-2 season and won the championship of the South Shore Conference.

After finishing second to Hingham in the regular league season, the Blue and Gold skated to a closely-fought 4-2 win over Weymouth and then a 5-1 victory over Braintree before completing their successful play-off sweep April 12 at the Randolph rink with their second triumph over Milton.

Tight defense and heads-up passing have been the keys for the young Hawks all season, and they were the story in the finals against Milton.

Sean Merrick, the high-scoring center, scored the first two goals on assist from Sean Brebbia and Pat Ford.

Tim Getto, a smooth-skating defenseman, set up Chris McGurk for the final goal. Quick kick-saves and a lightening glove helped Seahawk goalie Steve Pineault maintain a shut-out through two and two thirds periods before he was finally beaten on a screened shot for the only Milton score.

Superb forechecking and backchecking, also trademarks of the Seahawk season, limited the offensive pressure.

Pineault has improved dramatically over the course of the season in both consistency and effectiveness. If it's true that you can't win in the play-offs without good goal tending, the Seahawk victory shows that their netminder deserves a lion's share of the credit.

Four defensemen, Will Robinson, Sean McGowan, Mike Foley, and Getto all played important parts in the team defense. Robinson was penalty minute leader and rarely was beaten all season.

McGowan became ever more aggressive as the season progressed and contributed some important goals. Foley lifted the level of his checking, shooting, skating and continued to make one intelligent play after another all season long. Getto had one of the hardest shots in the league, rushed the puck to clear it extremely well, and played fine position defense.

Scoring was balanced, distributed evenly over the frontline skaters, but Merrick led in total goals. He is as fast and shifty a skater as there is in the league and showed no hesitation about bringing the puck right to the goal.

Tom Champagne's powerful lefty shot netted him a bucket of goals, too while center Tim Corkery scored mostly on deception and craftiness. Equally intelligent was the play of hustling Pat Ford, often the smallest man on ice but just as often a giant force for the Hawks.

Brebbia's brand of churning hustle not only made him a superior forechecker, it shook loose a number of scoring opportunities which he was not shy about cashing in.

Geoff Guilfoyle's patience and sense of position helped him contribute more than his share of both goals and assists. Chris McGurk's recklessness and leadership by full-speed example was there to ignite the team on more than one occasion.

Injuries limited ice time for Chris Sheehan and Joey Andrade, but they definitely contributed to the Hawks' fine season.

"It was a group of kids that was as smart, as selfless, and as free of egos as any that I've ever worked with," said Coach Jim McGowan. Assistant Coach Robert Ford agreed and pointed out that players come from Marshfield, Scituate, Cohasset, Norwell, and Hull, "but to watch them play, you'd think they all grew up on the same block."

Vo-Tech Advisory Board meets

The Vocational-Technical Program Advisory Board meeting will be held on Thursday, April 17, from 7 p.m. to 10 p.m. at the Abington campus of South Shore Vo-Tech, Ralph Hamlin Lane.

The board is comprised of tradesmen and business people from throughout the South Shore who have an extensive background in the individual trade programs offered to the students served by South Shore Vocational Technical High School. Twice each year the board meets with the shop and related instructors to review the course of study, discuss the latest innovations in each trade area and to offer suggestions concerning equipment purchases and training to the students of the regional school.

The meeting is being planned by Assistant Superintendent-Director Warren Anderson and Abington Campus Director Paul Bows.

Other items to be discussed and reviewed will include a report on the school budget for 1986-87 and alternatives to budget reductions.

Cohasset Worship

Second Congregational

Choir Cantata April 13: Sunday morning, April 13, at 10 a.m., the choir will present the story of "Daniel" (of lions' den fame) in music. Phil VonIderstein will be Daniel. More next week.

The Balcony Organ is a gift from Letitia and Robert Jordan, Jr. We are grateful for this lovely addition to our worship services and will dedicate it with a special selection this Sunday.

Social Service League: The social workers and nurse at the Social Service League are available to serve the needs of all Cohasset residents. All of the programs the League sponsors are free but many depend on volunteers. Presently, people are needed to deliver meals-on-wheels one noonday every other week, especially Fridays. The Consignment Shop (which supports the League) needs help either one morning or afternoon a week, and the Senior Shuttle would welcome new drivers (men or women) for one morning or afternoon a month. If you can spare the time to help in any way, call the League office at 383-0771 or 383-0821.

A Note From the Minister: I am writing this note on the last day of my service as your minister. All around me, in an office which is often cluttered, is the additional clutter of moving: books to be sorted and packed, papers to be filed, sermons to be stored. Harry Woodhead, who has helped me with dozens of Children's Messages, reclines comfortably on four notebooks and a pile of old sermons. My task later this morning is to make some sense of all this chaos.

But before I do that, I want to take the time to thank you, all of you, for the privilege of serving with you in the church. We have been ministers together, and it is our mutual efforts "in the service of God and humanity" that has made the life of the church worthwhile and productive. I know that your part of the work and worship of this church will continue, and that through the interim period as well as in the work of your new minister, you will cooperate in the partnership of ministry that is the church's greatest strength.

Now that I no longer serve as your minister, I want to reiterate my own and the church's policy regarding any return visits on my part. I will be performing a few weddings here during the summer and early fall, for couples who have made arrangements and plans (some of them as long as a year ago) for weddings in the church. Once the interim minister and your new minister are on duty, it will be appropriate for them to perform all services in the church. Only at the request of one of them will I consider leading a service. (As a matter of fact, I would rather be present as a friend for such special occasions as weddings and memorial services. Especially weddings!)

Finally, I want to express my own and my family's surprise and gratitude for the "interruption" at the end of the Easter Service. The hand-painted mirror, with its familiar scene of Cohasset Common, will have a special place in our new home in Milton. We will put the generous monetary gift to some special use, so that we can always remember with love and gratutude our friends in Cohasset. Our new address is 483 Canton Avenue, Milton, MA 02186. Our telephone number is 696-1994. Thank you. God bless you all.

HUNTER RESIGNS

Another aspect of love which finds expression in families is the capacity to let go. The analogy holds as the church wishes Rick Hunter well in his move from a ministry of music with us to a study of law at Suffolk in Boston. Rick plans to continue his full-time occupation while studying law at night. It will be a heavy load which necessitates his leaving the church. His last Sunday will be June 29.

Rick has been our Organist and Choir Director for ten years. In many ways he found great nurture in the church family, and contributed so outstandingly in forging a strong, volunteer choir and presenting outstanding musical programs. He earned a reputation throughout the South Shore as one of the pre-eminent musicians and choir directors. In addition to his musical competence, the church appreciated Rick's sense of humor and warm, personal manner.

A search committee for a new Organist and Choir Director is now being formed, and the hope is to have this person in place by Sunday, September 7.

UNITED THANK OFFERING

The spring ingathering of the United Thank Offering will take place on Sunday, April 27. Twice a year the church expresses thanks to God in this special offering which is used to help in the mission of the church locally and world-wide. Small blue boxes are available for use in collecting offerings day by day. Then checks for the amount accumulated can be returned on the 27th for this important mission work.

A letter explaining the offering will be in the mail soon. Sue Mullett, who volunteers for the United Thank Offering by addressing the many congregations of our diocese, will speak Sunday, April 20.

SPRING & SUMMER CLOTHING

The Wellspring Interfaith Thrift Shop and Fellowship Center would appreciate a donation of any spring or summer clothing from your closet in the next few weeks. There is a box in the hall at the office entrance which will be delivered to Hull.

SOCIAL SERVICE LEAGUE

The social workers and nurse at the Social Service League are available to serve the needs of all Cohasset residents. All of the programs the League sponsors and the services it provides are free, but many depend on volunteers. Presently people are needed to deliver meals-on-wheels one noonday every other week, especially Fridays. The Consignment Shop (which supports the League) needs help either one morning or afternoon a week, and the Senior Shuttle bus would welcome new drivers (men or women) for one morning or afternoon a month. If anyone can spare the time to help in any way, call the League office at 383-0771 or 0821.

Historical Society Museum Tour May 16

The Cohasset Historical Society and Cohasset Recreation Department will hold the annual spring co-sponsored tour of the Historical Society's two museum buildings at Cohasset center at 11 a.m. Friday, May 16.

Cohasset and area residents are invited.

This special pre-summer season tour of the Society's museums will visit the Maritime Museum and the Captain John Wilson House on Elm Street. This spring tour marks the fifth year of the combined tours sponsored by the Recreation Department and Historical Society. The Captain John Wilson Historical House contains a collection of antique home furnishings, furniture, kitchenware, childrens' toys, and artworks donated to the Society from other early homes of the town. The house was built in the year 1810 by housewright David Nichols for Capt. John Wilson, a Cohasset Sea Captain.

The Maritime Museum, a mid-1700's ship chandlery originally owned by the Bates family, contains numerous artifacts, models, documents, prints and paintings relating to Cohasset's seafaring past during America's "Age of Sail". Included are relics from some of the many local shipwrecks, also equipment and gear from the town's 19th century fishing fleets, and the stories of Minot's Ledge Lighthouse and of local volunteer lifesavers.

To register for this special guided tour of the Historical Society's museums call the Cohasset Recreation Department office at 383-6791. A $1 donation will be requested at the time of the tour. The donation will be for the benefit of the Historical Society. This special and unusual tour will meet at the Maritime Museum, Elm Street, Cohasset Center.

No smoking ban to begin at Vo-Tech in September

By John O'Donnell
Mariner Staff

Students at South Shore Regional Vocational Technical High School won't be allowed to smoke on school grounds starting in September.

The regional school committee voted last week to ban student smoking at both the Hanover and Abington campuses, beginning with the 1986-87 school year.

"The present policy can't be supervised or enforced," said Chairman Robert Molla of Norwell. "This is the only workable solution."

Current regulations allow students to smoke outside in a designated area before and after school. Smoking is prohibited during school hours, and students are not permitted to smoke inside of the building at any time. However, school officials said that students haven't obeyed the regulations, necessitating a new policy.

"We've seen a lot of irresponsibility on the part of the students regarding smoking privileges," said Superintendent-Director Clifford W. Easton. "We've given them several chances to make the policy work. We have every responsibility to take the next step," he said.

The administration warned students at the beginning of the year that outdoor litter was a problem. Trash receptacles were placed at the entrances to the building, but litter is still a problem, Easton said.

In December, the student council drafted rules prohibiting the carrying of smoking materials during school hours in response to the administration's concern about the indoor smoking problem.

The rules, which went into effect Jan. 2, prohibited students from carrying cigarettes, matches, lighters or any other smoking materials during school hours. The student council suggested that students either leave smoking materials at home or leave the materials in lockers during the school day.

Student council officers agree the rules have not curbed smoking in the building.

"We made our recommendations to the students and things haven't improved," said Student Council President Dianna Manley at the Feb. 12 school committee meeting. "We tried. We don't know what to do next."

At that meeting, the school committee asked the administration to develop an enforceable smoking policy. Easton said last week that a smoking ban is the best solution.

"They didn't respect our compromises," he said. "They have flown in the face of our regulations."

Adminstrators have said that smoking in the restrooms is a major problem. Toilets and sinks are filled with cigarette butts by the end of the day, Administrator Warren Anderson said.

The school committee hired a female monitor last week to police the girl's locker room for the remainder of the school year at a cost not to exceed $4,100. Smoking in the girl's locker room is difficult to restrict because there are not enough female faculty members to adequately monitor the locker room.

Easton said that allowing students to smoke is inconsistent with the health concerns associated with smoking.

"I think we're being hypocritical to say that smoking is damaging to your health, but to say it's okay to smoke before and after school," he said. "It's like talking out both sides of your mouth."

A last glimpse at Road Race by the Sea

Cohasset Rotarian John Lennon, protected under an umbrella from the cold mist last Sunday, awaits the 10K finishers. Michael Equi takes down the times for each runner.

The roller coaster, otherwise known as Forest Avenue, is a challenge for the most competent runner. Water, handed out by caring bystanders along the route, is a necessity to replenish each runner along the course.

Atty. David Nagle from Hanover begins the steady climb from the coastal road along Atlantic Avenue to the uphill trek along Forest Avenue. This is the point where most runners experience "The wall."

Mark Equi of Cohasset helped the Rotary Club members construct the rope boundary at the beginning of the race. Mark's dad is a member of Cohasset Rotary, sponsors of the 10K race.

John Devaney and his daughter Melissa give vocal support to the runners as they speed by. Despite the cold wind and mist, Melissa was warm and comfortable.

Anxious refreshment vendors stand ready to serve thirsty athletes. Brian Riley, Mark Riley and Charlie Endris await the runners as they approach a hill along Jerusalem Road.

Try a chicken reuben for Patriots Day weekend

Hardly a month goes by without offering us a little bonus in the way of a three-day weekend.

Patriot's Day is coming up next -three days devoted to ignoring the alarm clock, welcoming out-of-towners who suddenly recall our close proximity to beckoning beaches, or perhaps a change of scenery for those of us who have weathered the winter here in town. Well, there's no denying we all have to eat, and so part of the planning is a shopping list that includes a few extras. You might want to pick up the ingredients for this recipe from Reanne Rosenhahn. She likes to bake for her family, and this is a coffee cake she prepared for the Easter weekend, a recipe she got from Mary Anne Ginelli, another in a group of friends who are constantly swapping recipes.

STRUDEL COFFEE CAKE

1 1/2 c. sugar
1/2 c. margarine
2 eggs
1 c. milk
3 c. flour
4 tsp. baking powder
1 tsp. salt (optional)
FILLING:
1 c. brown sugar
4 T flour
4 tsp. cinnamon
4 T melted margarine
3/4 c. chopped nuts

Pour batter in 9x13" greased pan. Mix together ingredients for filling and sprinkle on top. Using a knife, cut through filling to combine with batter for a marbleized effect. Bake at 375 degrees for 30 min.

It's a vanished way of life now, but in a more leisurely world, transatlantic crossings were made on board such ships as the S.S. France. What a life it was—three glorious meals a day, with midmorning bouillon, afternoon tea and midnight buffets for those who had nothing to do but recover their appetites in time for the next meal. French cuisine was first-class, but there were simple items served, such as the onion soup relied on by many passengers as a cure from too much partying the night before. Hopping the Atlantic on board today's crowded, noisy jets can't compare to the crossing on a luxurious liner, but for a stay-at-home leisurely weekend, there's nothing quite like having a few friends over to sip on a glass of wine and to munch on these appetizers called

CRESCENT N' SAUSAGE ITALIANS

1 can crescent dinner rolls
2 T butter, melted
1/4 c. Parmesan cheese
1 T oregano
8 brown-and-serve sausages

Separate dough into four rectangles. Brush with butter. Combine cheese and oregano. Sprinkle over dough. Cut each rectangle, crosswide, to form two squares. Place sausage on each square and roll it up. Cut each roll into 3 or 4 pieces. Secure each with toothpick. Place, cut side down, on an ungreased cookie sheet. Bake at 375 for 12 to 15 min.

For most of us our time in the kitchen is limited and it's all too easy to revert to old standbys like steak, broiled chicken and spaghetti.

Not so for Barbara Valentine Sesnewicz, an artist and collector of old dolls, antique toys and cookbooks which number close to 500. Her passion for reading cookbooks is so contagious that her husband, Richard, and their three children, Jenna, Brett and Lindsay, love to eat and what is even better, to cook. So busy with her hobbies, Barbara keeps a few favorite recipes handy for company, one of which is

CHICKEN REUBEN

Boneless chicken breasts, four, to serve four guests.
1 large can sauerkraut, drained
Swiss cheese
Bottle of Russian dressing

This recipe would serve four, but amounts can be changed to accommodate number to be served. Lay chicken flat in baking pan. Layer cheese and sauerkraut on each and pour dressing over all. Bake covered at 350 for first 15 min., then uncover and bake for approximately 30 min. longer.

Note: To accompany casserole, Barbara serves German dumplings, or buttered noodles, red cabbage, tiny frozen peas, or other vegetable of your choice. For dessert they have her homemade Rum Almond Mousse, a recipe she has just entered in a contest and she has promised to let us know how she makes out—sounds like a prize-winner!

THE DRAGON'S DUNGEON — By Claire McDonough

Caution: She breaks for neighborhood yard sales

I slung my pocketbook over my shoulder and sauntered casually toward the door.

"Think I'll get me a little fresh air," I said nonchalantly.

The Dragon looked up suspiciously. "You're going yard saling aren't you? Tell the truth."

"Oh," I replied innocently, "it's possible. It's spring now and people are starting to have yard sales. I might just swing by one or two to look over the merchandise."

The Dragon groaned. "You have never in your life just swung by a yard sale and looked over the merchandise. You always come home loaded down with stuff we can't possibly use and that even its owner didn't want."

"That's not exactly true," I objected. "I'm really a very discerning shopper."

"Sure. Discerning. Be honest. Have you ever once gone to a yard sale and not bought something.?"

I shrugged. "It seems so, um, rejecting to not buy anything. I mean, here these people have emptied out the secret places in their homes — their drawers and closets — and spread their treasures out for my approval. How can I just walk away without buying something?"

He sighed. "They do not lay out their treasures. They lay out junk that they don't want or need. They just hope that some dingbat like you won't be assertive enough to walk away without buying something. Over the years you have come home with an astounding collection of other people's trash.

"For example, what ever possessed you to buy Massachusetts House of Representative Citations awarded to people you don't even know?"

"Those," I retorted hotly,"are historic documents. The people who received them may someday become prominent statesman and we'll just see who's laughing at whom then."

"For the moment,"the Dragon said, "We won't go into the likelihood that someone who retired in 1933 after 40 years of dedicated service as measurer of bark in Agawam has a brilliant political career ahead of him. Can you justify buying a handprint in sand of a child whose identity will always be a mystery to you?"

"It was so poignant," I explained. "I remembered how every Mothers Day our kids used to make them in kindergarten and bring them home and give them to me, and I'd get so happy I'd cry. I couldn't bear to think of that sweet little handprint being thrown away."

"That print may have belonged to a hand that later grew into the hand of an axe murderer," the Dragon said. "Even Moammar Khadafy started out with little hands. And why did you buy a half-finished afghan?"

"Someday, when I retire, I will fill my golden hours knitting the rest of it. If I can find yarn that matches."

"I can't wait to see that. And I know you love to read but can you explain why you bought a book on "Training Your Lemming?"

"Breida has a guinea pig. The technique is probably interchangeable."

"How about the half-framed stitchery?"

"It looks perfectly nice on our bedroom wall with half a frame."

"The food processor with no blades?"

"Okay, so its outdated and you can't get blades for that model any more. Some day at a yard sale I just may come across a blade that fits."

"Sure. Right after you win Megabucks. Or lose 20 pounds. Whichever comes first."

"Well," I sniffed, "maybe I could lose 20 pounds if you didn't use the slant board and the exercycle I bought a yard sales to hang your clothes on."

"Look," he said reasonably, "let's compromise. I think I have a plan that would make us both happy. You love yard sales and I can't stand looking at the things you buy. Why don't you have a yard sale and get rid of it all?"

"Two reasons," I told him. "First of all, you've already taken most of it to the dump. And secondly, who in her right mind would buy that junk?"

Politicus — by David A. Mittell, Jr.

Former lieutenant governor comes to town

As is the case with Gov. Dukakis, when I report on John Kerry I am not entirely objective. Although I was never as close or devoted to him as I was to Dukakis, I admired him, was a guest in his house, and contributed to his 1982 campaign for Lt. Governor.

I was therefore pretty ticked off when he walked away from his 1982 assurances and ran for the U.S. Senate. When he won my emotions were identical to those I have when the Yankees win the pennant...'tis the worst possible outcome, I'd prefer anyone else. In Kerry's case it comes down to institutional loyalty, which I believe in. What kind of a country are we going to have, how are we going to expect ordinary workers and business people to honor their agreements if those we look up to won't finish their work?

Moreover, having run unvictoriously three times for public office myself, I would give my left typewriter finger to be Lt. Governor...I'd treat that supernumerary office as though crowned Holy Roman Emperor by the Pope. So, I think, would a lot of people who build America in jobs that are much less than they would wish. Therefore, whereas I am happy for contemporaries such as Phil Johnston, Frank Hynes, and Bill Golden who have gotten ahead in polities, I resent John Kerry rather deeply. Before I report on his recent presence in Foxborough I will tell you that I have come to consider him an overambitious lightweight. That's what I would say in the confidence of a three-martini lunch, and I might as well be candid about it here.

The Foxborough event was a one-hour meeting the former Lt. Governor held last week with the weekly press during a swing through Southeastern Massachusetts. Representing the amalgamated Culter empire were your reporter; Mariner/News/Forum publisher David Cutler; and David's father John Cutler, the distinguished biographer of Curley, Brooke, Honey Fitzgerald and Cardinal Cushing, who publishes the Duxbury Clipper.

Fifteen minutes after the anointed hour Kerry's advance staff announced to the approximately ten guests: "You may take your seats now, the senator will be along in a few minutes." I said to David, "It's a beautiful day in the neighborhood!" (Why is it political people's people treat a PhD. like John Cutler, an entrepreneur like David Cutler, and a doctor of dyspepsia like me like children? And why is it political people take along so many supernumerary sidekicks? Golly, even Phil Johnston (the Sec. of Human Services) whom we have known for years, never comes by the Mariner anymore without some aide whose only job seems to be to sit there and look stupid while we talk and watch for Phil's cue to tell him he has to go.

Kerry walked in at exactly the correct increment of lateness for an important person to be --- late enough for a busy senator but not so late as to get John Cutler and me, who hate to wait, steamed. At once he demonstrated why he and his 534 colleagues and not Ronald Reagan are the reason this country has a two trillion dollar debt. He began by giving a rather articulate synopsis of the dangers of the debt, then he proceeded to recount spending program after spending program that he has had a hand in saving.

Surely that is a performance that is given in 535 districts by Republicans and Democrats and liberals and conservatives. Kerry even took some credit for the fact that military spending in Massachusetts is, as he reports, second only to California in the nation. (If you believe that's his doing you need more help than I can give you.)

Kerry noted that he voted for the Gramm-Rudman deficit reduction plan-- a vote of some fortitude for a liberal Democrat who rode noisy constituencies into office. He explained that he voted for it because he believes that only with the structure of Gramm-Rudman in place will Congress be goaded into making difficult budget decisions. In that he is probably correct and is certainly acting responsibly.

The chief Massachusetts issue Kerry went into was the Central Artery/harbor tunnel project in Boston. If I have him right he considers the Artery portion of the project vital to our economic development. In this position he is dutifully peddling the Dukakis-Salvucci line. (Frederick Salvucci is the Massachusetts Sec. of Transportation.) I have long argued that spending $2 billion on a two mile highway through Boston is neither in Boston's interest nor ours. But let's assume that this is another issue I'll turn out to be wrong about. I still find it bothersome when the Bay State Sec. of Transportation thinks and the U.S. Senator blinks.

In pushing the Dukakis/Salvucci line, Kerry is behaving more like the lt. governor than the U.S. senator. The merits of the Artery aside, I don't believe the public interest is served when the U.S. Senator is, in effect, a member of the governor's political organization. In such circumstances who is to ask the challenging question, who is to offer a fresh point of view? Politically Kerry and Dukakis are two peas of a pod (although in personal qualities very different), and I would argue that the governor himself is not served by such an arrangement.

To be blunt about it, most of the rest of our interview with Kerry isn't worth reporting. He has the habit, common to the political species, of using up interview time with long-winded, boring answers. The press for our part asked long-winded, easy questions, and I trust he was as bored with us as we were with him.

He did manage to get across that he favors commuter rail to the South Shore, the survival, subsidized if neccessary, of the Quincy Shipyard, and continued funding for Amtrak and the Small Business Administration; that in principle he favors the extradition of bomb throwers back to Ireland despite role he has had in obstructing a revised extradition tready; and that he opposes the proposed Attleborough Mall on grounds it violates Federal Clean Water Act.

I regret writing negatively about this or any fellow, I really do. I got trashed by the press when I was in politics and I am aware of the ease with which an injury is done. But I think we need and want leaders to look up to, leaders who elevate our standards. In John Kerry I must report that I see a rote liberal without the wit, pith, or substance of a Barney Frank or a Gerry Studds.

That isn't to say he isn't able, honest, and occasionally quite eloquent. Except in the manner of his taking the office he has not brought dishonor on himself or his office. Were he a state legislator I'd consider him first rate.

But this is Webster's senate seat, and Sumner's and Saltonstall's and Tsongas'. In taking the seat by walking away from his commitment to the lieutenant governorship and to Gov. Dukakis, Kerry acted like some college basketball coach walking out on his contract in order to move a litte closer to the big time.

In the terrorized world we live in, such acts are not heinous or evil, nor are they uncommon. But I take the old-fashioned view that when we fill Webster's senate seat we are looking for the uncommon man. We are looking beyond looks and clothes and polls and the cultivation of constituencies. We are looking for greatness, and if you think I have here been too harsh on John Kerry my answer is that we will not find greatness, nor will John Kerry ever achieve it, if his tenancy of Webster's seat is judged, like pornography, "by community standards."

World of Weather: April showers can turn into boomers

During April the sun's rays progress farther northward heating the earth's surface while the upper air remains cool. The warm surface air expands and rises through the cooler and denser upper air reaches its dew point and clouds are formed. Depending upon varying conditions the clouds may sprinkle the earth with gentle "April Showers" or lash out with grumbling thunder, lightning and often hail.

Temperature averages, during April, rise considerably in the northern tier of states. Caribou, Maine sees its average temperature rise from 30 deg. to 43 deg. (F); International Falls, Minnestoa from 30 to 45 deg.(F);Seattle, Washington from 46 to 54 deg. (F). Southern sections of the nation experience a less dramatic change. Miami, Florida; from 73 to 76 deg. (F), and on the Pacific Coast, San Diego, California goes from 59 to 62 deg. (F).

Extreme temperatures for the lower 48 states for April are: 118 deg. (F) at Volcano Springs, California on April 25, 1898 and 36 deg. below zero at Eagle Nest, New Mexico on April 5, 1945.

BOSTON MARATHON

The Boston Athletic Association(B.A.A)scheduled their first long-distance foot race on Patriots Day in April 1897, as part of their annual track meet in Boston. The marathon grew in popularity and today attracts thousands of participants, men, women, and courageous individuals confined to wheelchairs.

Because of the vagaries of April weather, the race has been run under a wide variety of conditions, ranging from bone chilling cold to torrid heat. Temperature extremes for Boston, on or about Patriots Day, clearly indicate that Mother Nature can play a deciding roll in the outcome of the race. On April 20, 1897 the mercury plunged to 21 degrees, while April 18, 1976 saw it rise to a mid-summer's reading of 94 degrees.

The coldest Marathon Day was in 1925, when race-time temperatures in downtown Boston hovered in the low to mid-thirties, with a strong north wind. The second coldest was in 1967 when the maximum temperature along the race route was only 38 degrees, with light rain adding to the discomfort of the runners. The hottest Marathon Day occurred in 1976 when temperatures in many parts of Massachusetts reached 100 degrees. The official temperature at Framingham, during the race, peaked at 94 degrees. Temperature records were set for the month of April throughout central and southern New England on the 18th and 19th.

The Marathon has been blessed in not experiencing the wind driven rain or snow of a major coastal storm. The odds of percipitation falling on an April day in Boston are one in three. The odds of snow by Patriots Day are less than one in thirty and there have been only two marathons with snowflakes reported. The race in 1918 was run in moderate rain with Boston recording over one-half inch during the day. (Reference: David Ludlum's Marathon Weather).

MARCH SUMMARY

In spite of a warm period at the end of March that saw temperatures climb into the 70's, the average temperature was cooler than normal in most of southeastern Massachusetts and a bit dryer than normal.

A bitter cold snap on the eighth brought howling northwest winds and wind chill readings of 20-30 below zero. Boston's reading of seven degrees broke the old date record of 1883.

On the 14th and early morning of the 15th heavy rain occurred, causing street and basement flooding in many area towns.

Total melted precipitation, at my station in Marshfield, was 3.15 inches, .64 inches below normal. There was only four inches of snow, 3.7 inches below normal. The maximum 24 hour rainfall was 1.67 inches on March 14-15. Rain .01 inch or more, occurred on 11 days with a trace on one day. Snow 1.0 inch or more, occurred on only two days with a trace on one day. Total precipitation this year has been 13.60 inches, 2.76 inches above normal.

The mean temperature was 35.6 degrees, 1.4 degrees below normal. The average daily maximum reading was 47.2 degrees, while the average daily minimum was 24 degrees. The low temperature for the month was 2 degrees below zero on March 8 with a high reading of 76 degrees on March 30.

There were six clear days, nineteen partly cloudy days and six cloudy days. The average wind speed was 13.8 mph, which is normal. The highest observed gust was 58 mph on the 19th. On that same day gusts of 65 mph were reported on the Cape as southwest winds swept through our region.

The normal heating season is from Sept. 1 to May 23. Only nine percent of the heating year remains.

FOR THE RECORD

In a recent Mariner, Joan Pinkham stated in her From the Garden column: "Mother Nature can be very devious at this time of year, lulling us into putting away our woolies one day, only to have us shivering the next. Just think, only two years ago we had the worst spring storm of the century with 60 mph winds and a foot of snow, even though April was only two days away."

The storm she referred to was on March 29, 1984 which was a powerful Northeaster and the worst March storm since 1956. While up to 15 inches of snow was reported inland, it was mostly rain and sleet along the coast, with only three to five inches of snow recorded in South Shore communities. It was the powerful wind, gusting 60-65 mph, that wreaked havoc causing electrical outages in virtually every town.

The worst spring storm of the century occurred on April 6, 1982. This Great Blizzard surpassed the April 9, 1917 record for a spring snowfall. Generally 10 to 14 inches of snow fell with near hurricane force winds pounding our region. In Marshfield, I recorded 15 inches of snow for a storm total, with a peak wind gust of 71 mph from the northeast at 6:45 p.m. April 6. The storm wound down on the morning of the 7th as it passed to the east on a track placing it south of Nova Scotia at noon. Heavy drifting continued as northwest gales lashed our area in the wake of this great storm.

Have a good day and a nice forever.

Purple prom party to be held April 22

The second annual Purple Prom Parties will be held Tuesday, April 22, from 8 p.m. til midnight in Randolph.

The parties will kick off a safe prom season for teenagers across Massachusetts, and will be sponsored by the Mass Association of Alcohol Abuse Prevention Centers, and by Prevention Resources, Newton.

Last year's Purple Prom Party was great success. Co-sponsored by WHTT Radio, it was held at the Palace in Saugus, and attracted more than 700 teenagers, who danced and partied, and proved that they could have a great time without alcohol or other drugs. This year, four Purple Prom Parties will be held.

The most immediate location is Vincent's Night-club, Routes 28 and 128, Randolph -sponsored by WHTT Radio, and Prevention Resources of Newton.

The party will feature appearances by radio personalities. Teens will be treated to free Coca Cola, courtesy of the Coca Cola Bottlers of New England. Mr. Tux will stage a fashion show with the latest in formal wear. Ibis Salon of Boston will demonstrate the newest styles in hair and makeup, and free records will be given away by Warner Brothers Records.

Tickets for all four parties will be sold, beginning April 8, at all Ticketron locations, and at all Mr. Tux stores in Massachsuetts. Tickets are $5 in advance, and $7 at the door for the Palace, Vincent's, and the Metro. Tickets for September's are $4 in advance, $5 at the door.

Teenage alcohol and drug abuse is a growing problem. It affects everyone - teens themselves, their families, and society as a whole. Alcohol and drug-related car accidents are the leading cause of death for young people, 15 to 24 years old.

"Liquor industry advertising sells young people on the idea that they can be gorgeous, sexy, and popular if they drink Brand X beer, or Brand Y wine. We want to tell kids - and show kids - that they can have a wonderful time - and a wonderful life -without alcohol or other drugs," said Cathy Corcoran of Prevention Resources of Newton. We are working to change this terrible situation. Our immediate goal is to insure a safe prom season, and to keep teens from driving after drinking or using drugs. Our long term goal is to help young people make responsible decisions about the use of alcohol and other drugs throughout their lives, she said.

For more information, call Cathy Corcoran at 749-3410.

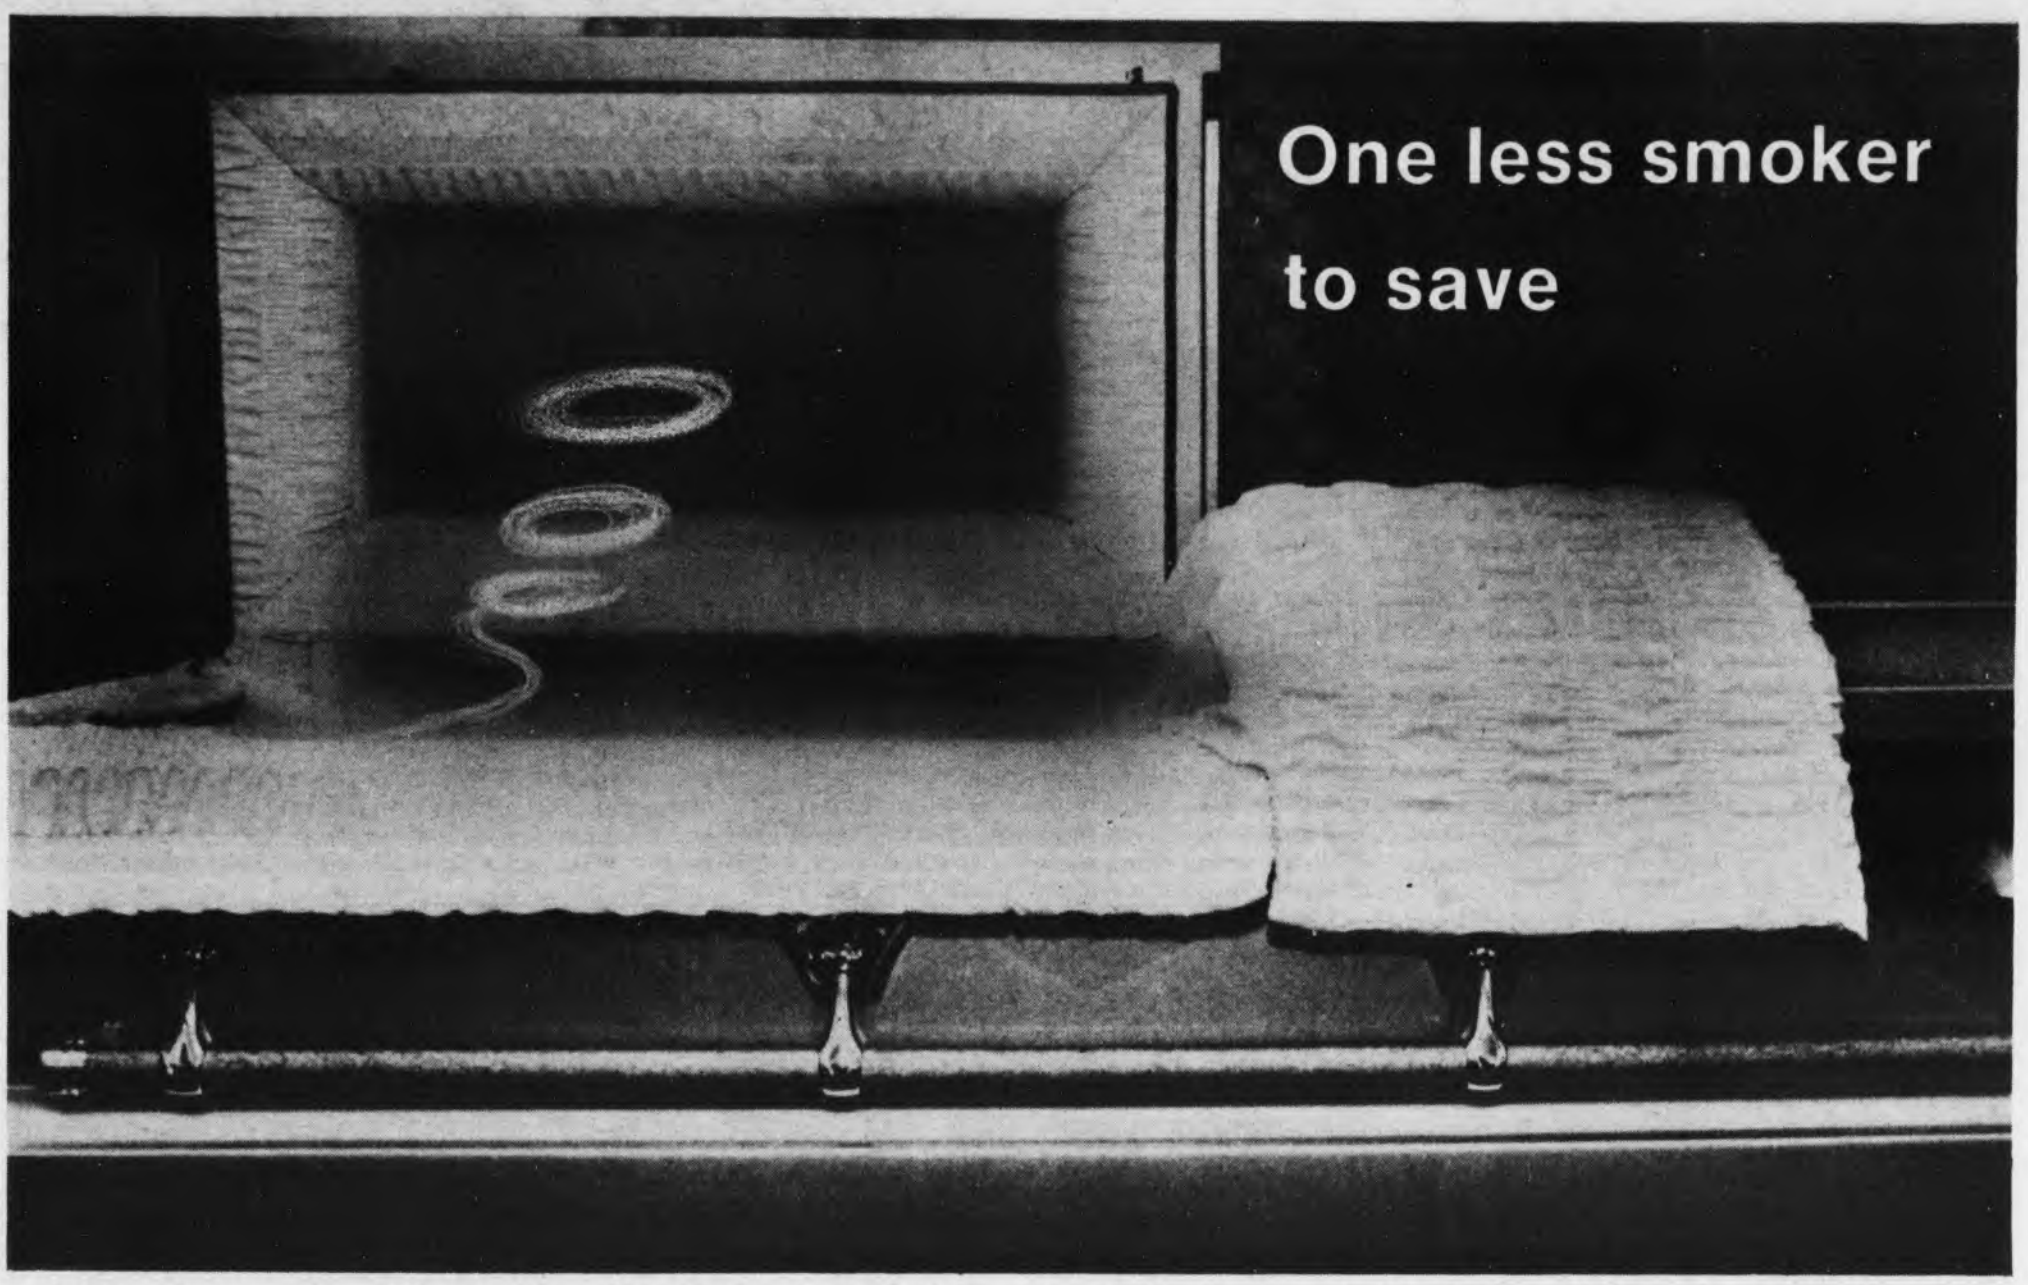
A Stone's Throw——————by Paul Steven Stone



Lyle Moody had everything to live for. A beautiful wife, three lovely children, and a house with a $93,000 mortgage.

But like thousands of cigarette smokers who die each year, Lyle's death was a tragedy that could have been prevented.

Because, like thousands of cigarette smokers who die each year, Lyle Moody was nagged to death.

The doctors gave some medical term to Lyle's sudden departure, but those of us who knew Lyle in those final years saw him slowly crushed like one of his favorite Marlboro's under the weight of his growing guilt.

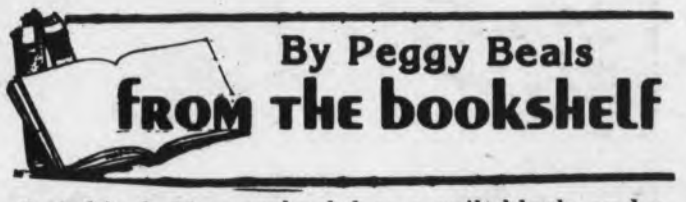
Eventually, there was no place Lyle could retreat for a peaceful smoke. No individual he could trust. Friends felt compelled to have heart-to-heart talks on a daily basis. Strangers at parties would pull out color Polaroids of tar-blackened lungs.

Well, Lyle's free of all that now. His wife can put away the air freshener. His friends at work can remove the fan they set up next to his desk. There's one less smoker to nag into an early grave.

Go ahead, Lyle; wherever you are, light one up.

You can bet God never listens to the Surgeon General.

'Ozark Find,' 'Seuss for Adults' & 'Food for Thought'



Food—that could be the theme of this column, with just a few margin releases. Robertson Davies' welcome new book isn't about food. Bred In The Bone (bred, ergo, food?) impressed me as a rich feast of reading. It's the life story of Francis, product of a rich Canadian mother and a shrewd Englishman. Francis has enough money, artistic leanings, and is steered by his father into some professional work, but that's just the bones, to be fleshed out by a splendid storyteller with a mixture of circumstances, humor, observation, education, philosophy.

It was a slow read for me, savored, not bolted, and worth it. Davies is Canadian. Why do we not hear more of Canadian authors? Mazo de la Roche and her Jalna series, L.M. Montgomery with Anne Of Green Gables books, and who else?

OZARK FIND

In that column in the Boston Globe about American food finds, the description of the Ozark Folk Center cookbook was so enticing I sent $4.67 to Box 500, Mountain View, ARK 72560. It's a doozy, a paperback booklet full of pioneer recipes for hearty country food, lots of sayings and lore, illustrations.

"Cry baby cookies: "Allus giv a baby one of thez cookies when it cries, unless the wind is in the northeast, then all babies will be cross no matter what you giv 'em."

"If a husband sits on the roof of his cottage seven hours, his next child will be a boy." "If a red haired gal comes in the kitchen when you're baking, watch out or the cake will fall." After the stack cakes, vinegar pudding and Rebel scrapple recipes are two pages of hints and remedies: "It takes a blue-eyed woman and a brown-eyed woman working together to make good lye soap."

Unusual, and fun, a delightful gift for someone with a sense of humor and an interest in cooking.

The I'd Rather Be Quilting Cookbook is another unusual, interesting one, which any quilter would appreciate. Miriam Layton, Patricia Walker and Marion Williams quilt in California. Each page of their big 8x11 paperback has a quilt block, and a menu, with recipes, and a cooking or quilting hint. The dishes are either long cook or quick fix, freeing up valuable time for stitchery. Let's hope it's still available from Madronna Pub., 2116 Western Ave., Seattle, WA 98121.

SEUSS FOR ADULTS

If you've eaten less wisely than we all know we should, but survived to Medicare age, you've probably been subjected to those dehumanizing tests the medics loves to order. Dr. Seuss obviously has. In You're Only Old Once, he travels with his marvelous drawings through a clinic with a hapless patient. Humiliating as it all is, you'll feel less victimized as you see the things through those wacky Seuss eyes. I hear this got a poor review in the New York Times. George Higgins, speaking at the Scituate library, said he had only to pan a book for it to leap to best sellerdom. This Seuss book has exceeded all expectation.

CHEWY MYSTERY

Lawrence Sanders writes on two levels. His "signs" and "commandment" books are good mysteries, usually featuring ex-cop Edward X. Delaney, a man who relishes good food, especially sandwiches you have to eat over the sink, stout with onions, horseradish, black breads, meats and dressings. He is also a tough thorough detective who gets results.

FOOD FOR THOUGHT

Because it is a very entertaining book, I drag The Ditto List in here. I heard about this Stephen Greenleaf book at the library desk. A gentleman was checking it out again because he thought it was so funny. It is a "love story about divorce." D.T. Jones, divorce lawyer, refers to the cases as the ditto list: Finder vs. Finder, Preston vs. Preston, Stone vs. Stone. Divorce lawyers aren't held in highest esteem. D.T. operates from sleaze, booze, a quick mind and tongue to match. He reminds me of Robert Parker's Spenser, and like him, is fundamentally a very good person.

Early American Decoration Convention planned

The Historical Society of Early American Decoration, Inc. will hold its spring convention and exhibit at the Dunfey Hyannis Hotel, in Hyannis.

Meetings and exhibitions are held twice a year, in the spring and fall. The exhibitions show the work of members as well as choice examples of the early craftsmen's art.

This enables members to study antique originals, and also interests owners, collectors and museums in preserving this important contribution to our American heritage.

Alice Wall of Plymouth is publicity chairman for the Hyannis convention. For information call 746-0588.

The Society was organized to carry on the work and honor the memory of Esther Stevens Brazer, who was a pioneer in the perpetuation of Early American Decoration as an art. The Society was first called the Esther Stevens Brazer Guild. In 1952 it was chartered by the State of New York as the Historical Society of Early American Decoration, Inc. (H.S.E.A.D, Inc.) A museum at the Harmanus Bleecker Center in Albany, N.Y. houses the Society's collection of tinware, furniture and numerous other decorated items.

Membership in the Society is open to active members who are involved in ornamental painting and associate members who are interested as collectors and researchers.

The exhibit is part of the Society's fall meeting and open to the public.

There is no admission charge. The schedule for Monday, April 21, is 9 a.m. - 11 p.m.

Here is an example of a craftsman's work which will be exhibited at the Early American Decoration Convention April 20-22.

☐ Which country produces more oil, Saudi Arabia or the U.S.? Answer below.

☐ A car operates at maximum economy, gas wise, at speeds between 25 and 35 miles per hour. Driving is a losing proposition.

☐ There are many underground streams in the Sahara Desert where, by digging through the sand, a desert angler can hook fresh water fish.

☐ In college one of my favorite courses was on Montaigne,the great essayist. I can still remember two of his comments: "Discretion is seeing as much as you ought, not as much as you can," and "Nothing fixes a thought so in the memory as the wish to forget it."

☐ When asked whether she was invited to the reception for Prince Charles and Lady Di, Jane Pauley said, "I didn't even make the outlist."

☐ A true vacuum is a space totally devoid of matter. On the planet Earth, where does a true vacuum exist? The answer is nowhere.

☐ The serious problems of the city are practically insoluble now, and they probably will remain so for the foreseeable future. As my college classmate, Joe Alsop, said: "The problem of the cities . . .is the most urgent, the most difficult, and the most frightening American domestic problem . . . since the Civil War."

☐ If it's not worth saying, it's sung. The guy who said that must have been thinking of current rock.

☐ Answer to quiz: The U.S. produces about 3 million more barrels of oil a day than Saudi Arabia.

Flea market fundraiser for Choral Arts Society

Choral Art Society volunteers are busy with the final details of their major fundraising event for the spring concert of Haydn's Creation May 17. A flea market will be held Saturday, April 19, 10 a.m. to 3 p.m., at St. Luke's Episcopal Church Parish Hall, Rte. 3A and First Parish Road, Scituate.

Gail Webster of Scituate, the chairman of the society's board of directors, is in charge. Phyllis Ketter, also of Scituate, chairman of the patrons and sponsors committee, will have a table with information about the society and its programs, and assisting her will be Mary-Jean Miner of Scituate, Carol Nickerson of Brant Rock and Carol Loring of Duxbury.

In charge of the light refreshments that will be for sale is Mrs. Fred Bennett of Green Harbor, with the help of Patricia Clark of Norwell and Beverly Conant of Pembroke.

Another table will have Marshfield's Kurt and Linda (Bennett) Schneider's homemade chocolates, while Fred Bennett of Green Harbor will round out the family's contribution with a table of his noted miniature furniture.

William Sano, the society's music director, is taking a table with a collection of household goods, souvenirs of travel, and what he calls excellent "junque." There will also be the Choral Art's own table with a few antiques, linens and old lace, collectibles, accesories, and, of course, attic treasures.

Volunteering at this table are Anna Myrle Snow, Connie Benzaquin, Marilyn Barrett, and Bettie-Jane Ruggles, all of Marshfield, and Robin MacFarlane of Scituate. A small donation will be asked at the door.

The Choral Art Society greatly appreciates the community support it receives, and also wishes to acknowledge the support, in part, for its programs, by the Massachusetts Arts Lottery, as administered by the Scituate and Marshfield Arts Councils.

Notre Dame athletic facility fundraiser draws 'The Stars'

By John Magadieu
Mariner Staff

Alumnae, parents and friends flocked to Notre Dame Academy in Hingham Sunday night to watch the stars come out.

An "Evening of Stars," featuring shining personalities from the worlds of sports and politics, spearheaded the school's campaign drive to build a new athletic facility.

The gala was organized by Chairman Anne Ridge of Duxbury and Boston Globe columnist Will McDonough of Hingham.

"It's going to be one of the most successful fundraising events ever held on the South Shore," McDonough predicted. "And the end result, they're going to have a first-class complete outdoor sports facility up here at the school."

Fittingly, the school's gymnasium became the center of the party universe, as it was transformed into a casino.

Banners chronicling the successes of Notre Dame track, softball and soccer teams hung above an arch of ballons.

The casino, complete with roulette wheels, card tables and play money, enticed a number of stars as well as stargazers.

"I did terribly," Doug Flutie confessed, "but my wife won big.

State Treasurer Bob Crane said, "The casino reminds me that a lot of people in this state still like to gamble, but it's for a worthy cause."

Crane added that he didn't participate in the wagering.

"I'm too anxious to get ready to perform with our group of singers and dancers for the people assembled here," he said.

Earlier, jazz filled the air as visitors intermingled with luminaries like Red Auerbach, John Havlicek, K.C. Jones, Bob Cousy and Dave Cowens of the Celtics.

"They're all so gracious and we're deeply grateful to them for coming," said school principal Sister Anne Monica Ruane, an avid Celtics fan. "I think this is a once-in-a-lifetime experience to get so many fantastic stars."

Football fans rubbed elbows at the roulette wheel with Peter Brock, Brian Holloway and Steve Grogan of the Patriots, as well as with Doug Flutie, the famed Boston College football miracle worker.

Flutie and Ted Kennedy, Jr., were especially popular with the school girls. They spent the night in front of the cameras as all the girls wanted their pictures taken with them.

Former Bruin star Terry O'Reilly enjoys a crabmeat cone.

"I think athletics is a great character building tool in the education of young people," said Bruin great Terry O'Reilly. Bobby Orr and Gerry Cheevers along with Red Sox star Jim Lonborg may have developed writer's cramp after signing volumes of autographs.

The event raised about $100,000 of the estimated $250,000 cost for the athletic facility, which will include a 440-meter track, soccer and softball fields.

In the casino, the cards were coming up aces for the all-girl college preparatory school. Sister Ruane said she expects to have a ground-breaking ceremony this spring.

Last year, the Notre Dame Aces went as far as the quarter-finals in the State South Sectional tournament after winning their league championship in softball.

The soccer team finished with a 10-2-2 record. In cross-country, the Aces ran to their third straight state title last year.

Joan Benoit Samuelson, the olympic champion marathoner from Maine said the event was especially meaningful for her. She recalled, "My career started on the track and I remember as a high school athlete, running on an old cinder track.

"It was so old," she said, "that the infield had grown in, so it wasn't actually a quarter-mile track; it was probably more like a 550 and I think a school of this size has done very well to be able to plan a track facility like this one, and I think they're going to get it.

"I think they deserve it," she added. "They've done an unbelievable job considering their facilities, with the championship teams they're had over the past several years.

"I had a great time and I think the girls at Notre Dame gave as much to the event as the guests who were invited tonight," she said.

Following an elegant buffet dinner, Bob Crane and "The Treasury Notes" swung into action.

Crane sang "He Never Returned," characterizing John MacKenzie as the eternal rider of Boston's MBTA. He also joined Mr. and Mrs. John Havlicek in "Lucille."

Fred Tagg, who sings the national anthem for the Celtics, belted out "Hello Dolly" and "New York, New York."

Ann Birmingham chugged out the "The Chatanooga Choo Choo," while Lynn Shannon sang "Everything Old is New Again," and "All That Jazz."

Buddy Lucas tap danced his way into their hearts and special guest singer K.C. Jones rendered "You're Nobody 'til Somebody Loves You" and "Georgia."

After the show, Anne Ridge announced, "After three months of hard work we are happy to say tonight that we have realized $100,000. She thanked everyone for their support.

So. Shore Science Center opens new peripheral trail

By Debby Muise
Special to the Mariner

On Saturday, April 12,the South Shore Natural Science Center in Norwell dedicated its sixth trail, a peripheral trail which links the other five.

The day opened to a standing-room only crowd as naturalist Bill Perkins led an armchair tour and slide show of the new trail. Bill, who is chairman of the education committee at the Center, has written a guide called "The Peripheral Trail." Joanne Papandrea of Scituate won an art competition and was chosen to illustrate the guide. Her original drawings are on exhibit at the Center.

Dedication ceremonies began at 10:30 a.m. with a message from chairman Richard McMullan. He thanked those involved in the project and welcomed all visitors including a special guest, Smokey the Bear. Smokey handed packages containing fire-prevention information to the children. He declined to be interviewed, presumably because he is still suffering from his childhood experiences when he was orphaned and seriously burned in a forest fire.

The ceremony continued with comments by Director Faith Burbank of Hingham. She described the Science Center for those not familiar with the facility — "It has 45 acres of property on three sites. The third and main site, right here (in Norwell), has 29 acres and is primarily glacial plain."

Plans for the new trail were originally part of a comprehensive study done three years ago by Monica Luft, a Radcliffe student, as part of her thesis in landscape architecture. Perkins planned the actual trail and directed the volunteer construction crew led by Charlie Morgan of Norwell.

The trail is dedicated to the memory of Jean "Pinkie" Baker from Pembroke, a member of the Center for five years, who died recently in a car accident. Her husband, Dr. William Baker, now of Rye, NH, and her two sons, Chip and Doug, were present at the dedication.

Perkins wrote in his guide: "I know from experience that if you gave "Pinkie" Baker a map and put her in the middle of a caravan she could still get lost. That she could be counted on to so rise to a challenge was one of the things that made her fun to be with and easy to love. It is to her, with love and a strong sense of her presence, that this guide is dedicated." Dr. Baker cut the ribbon to mark the opening of the trail to the public. He remarked with obvious emotion, "I think if there's any such thing as immortality, it's what people think of you after you aren't around. This (project) is a great (thing) that you people have done for Pinkie."

Following the ribbon-cutting, three groups led by guides from the center left to explore the new trial. A group of about 25 children, their parents and their favorite stuffed animals was led by Ginny Foster, a volunteer at the center, who recently moved to Norwell. The stuffed animal parade included a glow-worm, Big Bird, a giant caterpillar, a wooly mammoth, several rabbits, a raccoon, turtle and many bears.

Burbank and Sandy Davidson, communications director at the Center also walked along with the children's group and pointed out items of interest.

There were weasel and woodchuck burrows, chipmunk holes, furrows dug by skunks in search of grubs, fur left by owls dining on rodents, buds showing on trees and shrubs, and many other subtle signs of spring.

The trail is 2/3 (.6) miles long and features 17 points of interest that are described in detail in "The Peripheral Guide." It begins in an overgrown field that was once part of a farm. The original furrows can still be seen under the new growth of pines and bushes. The trail continues through an old cranberry bog and a hardwood forest. The wetlands have a small pond with a new 70 foot bridge built single-handedly by Eagle Scout Richard Gorham of Hanover. The bridge is dedicated to the memory of the late member Jeanne L. Delaney of Marshfield.

One of the more interesting landmarks along the trail is point #10, called "the eye of the needle." About 50 feet from the marker is a huge pine tree. Sometime in its past the growing tip was killed and two branches grew together to take its place, forming a closed circle.

An area of trees that were blown over approximately 30 years ago (point #11) is marked by one huge pine that displays its four foot root system. Mosses, lichens and insects are all part of the process that returns these fallen trees to the soil.

There is also a swamp, a tall pine split during an electrical storm, and an overlook which will be cleared later in the spring to allow a lovely look over a pond to a field.

The trail is about a one hour walk and ends at the Science Center's main building.

Children and parents were treated to doughnuts and juice. Everyone went home with a balloon and an autographed copy of "The Peripheral Trail."

The Science Center is a well-organized and fascinating place to visit. This event was one of many offered to adults and children. For a description of future classes and events, call 659-2559.

Students cancel trip plans

Libya strike hits home

By Jane Lane
Mariner Staff

The bombing last week of Libya is having an effect this week on students and parents in Cohasset.

Vacation trips to France and to England were scheduled since early December. Although not school-sponsored, chaperones included several high school teachers. About 40 high school students signed up for separate trips scheduled for the April vacation.

But after last week's U.S. relatiatory strike against Libya and the threat of further terrorist attacks against Americans, several students backed out of their plans. As of last Friday night, at least four of the original 33 students cancelled late last week. He suspected at least one or two additional students would decide to stay home.

Fortin, who has vacationed in France the past ten years, is the organizer of the Cohasset entourage. He and teachers Thomas O'Neil and Paul Narkiewicz met with concerned parents and students last week to discuss problems with the upcoming trip. Following that meeting, four of the students immediately decided to cancel their plans.

According to Fortin, the students who paid $844 for the trip last December, may not receive any reimbursement from Cultural Heritage Alliance, the company which organized the vacation. "They may get a little back, but there's no promise," he answered.

The French and Spanish teacher said this year he was feeling "more concern" than in past years. I still think things are quite safe over there," he noted. "But I think we'll keep a low profile and we probably won't be doing as much at night as we have in past years."

The students will visit museums and historical sites throughout the day, Fortin said, and attend a concert at night. But the traditional favorite activity, disco-dancing at night, will be eliminated from the tour this year.

"My feeling is that I didn't want to cancel the trip, because I still feel perfectly safe. Once we're there, we'll have a good trip. I'm fearful of the situation in Europe, but I didn't want to cancel the trip," he stated.

Fortin said if the trip occurs without incident this year "and terrorism has not increased, I might think about going next year. But maybe we'll go to Spain or Italy. Going to those countries will pose no real threat."

See John swim, and bike. . .

By John Magadieu
Mariner Staff

"Today is one of my favorite days," John Morgan of 24 Bow Street said Monday. "My two favorite days are the day of the New York Marathon and the day of the Boston Marathon. I just sit home and watch them on TV."

Morgan has run six marathons, including three times the annual Patriots Day jaunt between Hopkinton and Boston.

He said he has given up the 26-mile excursions for a sport that "doesn't take as much out of you." Triathlons.

This day, he afforded himself plenty of time between his 25-mile morning bike ride and his afternoon six mile run. "Right now, in Hopkinton it's just crazy." he said, as he settled in front of his television. "First of all, everybody's looking for a place to go to the bathroom. I don't know if you've ever been there at the start, but they have no facilities.

"Everybody's running around and people are putting vaseline on," he added. "The air is just electric out there. Everybody's getting psyched."

As Morgan speculated who would win this year's event, he recalled his first Boston Marathon.

"In 1980, the winners were Bill Rodgers and Rosie Ruiz," he said with a laugh.

"When you're running and you're not in contention, you're always asking Who's ahead?" he added. "Bill Rogers was ahead and Janet Garrreau was ahead.

"We kept hearing Janet Garreau. Janet Garreau at six miles, Janet Garreau at 15 miles, Janet Garreau at 20 miles. So we asked, Who won? and they said Rosie Ruiz." He said laughing. "And everybody said, Who?! It was so funny. I'll never forget it."

Morgan described his first marathon and how he initially decided to run the race.

"The first marathon I ever ran, I never trained for," he said. "I was a hockey player and I had a hockey game that Sunday night. Afterwards, we went out and drank, I mean Heinekins and schnapps 'til the wee hours.

"Every year, we'd have a party for the marathon. The hockey team would come in and we'd have Bloody Mary's for breakfast and the whole hockey team and their girlfriends would go watch the finish of the marathon.

"So this particular year, 1980, somebody asked me about the marathon; was I going to run? I said, No, no I don't have any way of getting there."

He added, "That was the only thing I could think of at the time. But this girl said, I'll give you a ride out, and I thought, all right. I had a little champagne in me, so it was easy for me to say Okay."

"Well I went home and went to bed," he said, "and I woke up at about 3 a.m. in a cold sweat and I said, I'm going to run the marathon in the morning! I had never run farther than 10 miles in my life and I was going to run the marathon. I said, I can't believe I told that girl to come and pick me up."

"So, she showed up in the morning, picked me up and drove me out to Hopkinton. I was psyched. I said, I'm going to do it."

Despite the lack of training and what he described as a "slight hangover", Morgan hit the streets without a hitch.

"I ran the first ten miles, no problem" he said. "I was running a little over six minutes per mile and felt pretty good.

"At Wellesley Hills, I had a little bit of a problem," he recalled. "The constant pounding tore up my knee a little bit from an old hockey injury, so I taped it up. I got to Brookline Village and I was so exhausted, I lay down on the sidewalk.

"I could see the Prudential tower only about four miles away," he said. "I lay down on the sidewalk and I will always remember a couple of things. One was that people came up to me, I must have looked pretty bad, people came up to me and said, Can we help you? Is there something we can do? I said,

Mitman not afraid of state housing threat

Selectman Clifford Mitman said he does not view the state's latest mandate to develop a policy for affordable housing as a threat.

"They aren't saying to us that we are discriminating," he said in response to a letter from the state Executive Office of Communities and Development (EOCD). "What they really want is some kind of housing policy from us, to think this through, not to commit us to a certain number of housing units."

In a terse letter sent last week to selectmen, EOCD assistant secretary Joseph Flatley stated if the town does not work to develop a policy to bring affordable housing to Cohasset, "the Secretary will have no choice but to make the determination that Cohasset is unreasonably restrictive of housing. This would result in the town's ineligibility for state discretionary funds."

Once again, the state has threatened to withhold Department of Environmental Quality Engineering (DEQE) grants to the town for its sewer plan if a housing policy is not adopted. "In order to recommend that the town continue to be eligible for this and future grants, we must resolve these issues within a timely manner," Flatley said in the letter.

When the issue was first confronted in 1983, Mitman said the state made a similar declaration.

The selectman, who was chairman at that time, said the board signed an agreement with EOCD committing the town to develop a housing policy.

Although the local housing authority since applied for funds to purchase housing for moderate and low income rental, the applications were denied.

"I don't think we have to do anything dramatic," Mitman said. "We have low income housing now on Government Island, but that's not what the state is dealing with. They want a policy, they'd like that to happen. They are thinking in terms of a policy."

Sewer commissioner Ted Guild would not comment on the possibility of withholding sewer grant money other than to say "I don't see how they could withhold money when we are under a court order to clean up our discharge permit. I can't imagine how they could possibly withhold funds we need to comply with a court order."

Mitman explained in 1983, selectmen signed an executive order which committed the town to develop Chapter 705 family housing. "It's something we knew we had to do," he said. "We knew we had a

Becker to resign chairmanship

In the wake of her election to the health board, Sharon Becker will probably step down as chairman of the disposal area study committee.

There's a reorganization meeting coming up for the disposal area committee," she said. "I don't know if I'll be able to serve both boards."

Becker said that the disposal area committee will be concerned with finding a waste-energy facility and developing a town transfer station in the coming years.

The committee is searching for a facility that uses garbage to produce energy to take the town's garbage. A town transfer station would be necessary to collect and store garbage until transported to a waste-energy facility.

Committee looking for workers

The Cohasset Democratic Town Committee announced today that the Committee is seeking registered Democrats of Cohasset who wish to be election workers.

"Any registered Democrat who wants to work as an election officer can apply to the Committee," said Donna McGee, Chairman. "The Committee will be making its decisions about the list at its' meeting on May 12," said McGee.

To be an election worker for the Democratic Party in Cohasset, explained McGee, a person must be a registered Democrat in Cohasset, explained McGee, and must not publicly support any candidate in a partisan election who is not a nominee of the Democratic Party.

Also, she explained, the By-Laws of the Cohasset Democratic Town Committee requires that anyone appointed as an election worker must be a member or Associate Member of the Committee. Anyone selected as an election officer by the Committee will be voted in as Associate Member, said McGee, and then will have to pay annual dues of $5.

Applications can be made by writing before May 12 to: Donna McGee, Chairman, Democratic Town Committee, 27 Hill Street, Cohasset, MA 02025.

McGee further noted that while Selectmen make the final appointments of election officials, they can do so only from a list supplied by the Town Committee.

Guild says sewer bill not padded

The sewer commission strongly denied the most recent bill submitted by special legal counsel regarding the negotiation of a sewer plan for the town is "padded."

Last week, selectmen Rocco Laugelle and James Gallagher voted against paying a $6,877 bill to Ward Engineering for services rendered from December through February. Gallagher claimed the bill was "padded," and did not contain specific details about the sevices rendered.

Selectmen also opposed the sewer commission's previous approval for payment of the bill. According to selectmen chairman Mary Jane McArthur and Diane Sullivan, all bills regarding the Ward Plan must be reviewed together by the town boards.

Special town meeting in December voted to appropriate $30,000 to continue negotiations with the state for the development of a sewer plan for the town. A portion of that voted stated all legal and engineering bills must be approved jointly by selectmen and the sewer commission.

Selectmen voted 3-2 last week to pay the bill despite their objections.

Sewer commissioner Ted Guild explained this week the bill follows a standard used by all engineering companies and regulated by the Environmental Protection Agency (EPA). He denied there was any "padding" by the firm, and said all services were individually outlined in the four-page billing form.

"This is a standard form which has been used by all engineering companies rendering services to the town," he stated. "There is nothing new or deceptive about this type of bill."

Executive Secretary Donald Andrew agreed with Guild that the bill followed the same procedure as all previous bills submitted by Ward Engineering. "It's the same format as the bills the town receives from all its consultants, particularly from our engineers. It's a standard form provided in the consultant's contract which includes a certain percentage for indirect labor and overhead costs. It's all standard," Andrew noted.

A similar form was submitted and approved by the town from the engineering company of Camp, Dresser and McKee after the completion of the water resources study.

Selectman Gallagher said last week he opposed the billing payment for "indirect labor." He questioned what that implied. Next to the statement "indirect labor" was inserted in parentheses "overhead and direct labor." Gallagher did not understand what was included under those subtotals.

Overhead costs, Guild explained, includes the management of the engineering company including utilities and secretarial assistance. 'That's a standard practice in the business. Ward Engineering routinely has given the town this type of bill, as has Camp, Dresser and McKee in their engineering work," Guild added.

Wrong figures used in sewer plant cost

Letter

To the Editor:

In Mr. R.M. Campbell's most recent letter (Mariner of 4/17/86) he used the figure of $3.3 million as Cohasset's share of the cost for Phase One of the Metcalf and Eddy plan. Even this unrealistically low figure is three times the $1.1 million appropriated by the June 1984 Town Meeting for the Ward Plan.

Each of these figures should be compared with Cohasset's upper limit of $2.0 million under Prop. 2½ as reported by the Capital Budget Outlay Committee at Town Meeting. Clearly, to do even Phase One of the M&E Plan, the Town would have to override Prop. 2½ by a wide margin with nothing left over for modernization of the Police and Fire Stations, the Town Office Building or other important capital outlays.

It has been, and continues to be, the Sewer Commission's objective to evolve an affordable plan, environmentally acceptable to both the state and to the town. We are making good progress towards this goal and will report to the residents at a public meeting on Thursday, May 15, at 8 p.m. at Town Hall. I urge as many as possible to attend.

Edward Guild

REAL ESTATE GUIDELINES
By Norma Telesco
Home Center Realty

SETTLEMENT DATES

The final settlement date is usually an important item in negotiating a purchase agreement on a home. This is the day that the buyers get their ownership papers and the sellers get their money. It's important to remember, however, that most standard contracts don't pinpoint a specific date, and many settlements are delayed, usually due to factors beyond the buyer's control.

Typically, the settlement will be set for a specific date, or as soon after that as the title search and lender's paper work can be completed. If anything even slightly out of the ordinary happens, your settlement schedule can be upset. A question can arise about liens that may have been paid, but not properly recorded. The buyers may find that something on their credit history must be cleared up or explained. These situations rarely cause the transaction to fall apart, but they can wreak havoc with your schedule for moving, or, if you're the seller, closing on your new home. Your Realtor will keep you up to date on the progress of your settlement to help avoid delays or minimize the inconvenience if one does occur.

If you're planning a move, Home Center Realty employs full service professionals who can get your home sold and help you find a new one. Stop by our office at 57 Water St., Hingham, or give us a call at 749-8833.

John Morgan & the Boston Marathon

Nope, I've just got to rest."

"The other thing I remember, and I can still see this guy's face, was John Kelly. He looked over at me and he had a look of pity, because he probably knew exactly what I was feeling. Anybody who's run 50 marathons, has experienced a bad situation. He just kind of looked over at me and went (sigh). He knew what was going on there; I had hit 'the wall.'

"I did get up and finish it," he added. "It took me four hours and ten minutes. After that, I always made sure I trained and I slept well the night before."

Morgan explained that when you train for a marathon you have to religiously get out every day and run 10 miles and on the weekends do 20 miles.

"People say they get bored running," he said, "but you can't get bored running because you're always either in pain or you're thinking of something.

"You're saying, How's my plant? Is my plant good? Are my arms moving in the right direction? Is my breathing right?

"You're just constantly running over these checks in your head and making adjustments."

Morgan explained while triathlons aren't as tough on his knees as marathons were, training for them is just as demanding.

"This morning, I went out and rode 25 miles and this afternoon, I'll probably go run six miles," he said.

"Tomorrow, I'll get up in the morning and I'll probably run first thing in the morning and then I'll swim in the afternoon.

"I try to swim about three miles per week and I ride anywhere from 100-125 miles per week and I run about 30 miles per week."

What keeps him going?

"I take about 40 vitamins everyday," he said with a chuckle. "Seriously, I'm a fanatic on vitamins. You know, people say that it's just throwing your money away, but religiously I take my vitamins.

"I drive a truck," he said, "so I'm on the road a lot and I eat at the famous Micky D's (McDonald's). I have terrible eating habits, so I have to compensate by eating vitamins."

Morgan explained food was an important part of his marathon training regimen.

"I think the worst feeling is when you finish, your stomach's all torn up inside because there's nothing in there.

"I try to eat a little bit in the morning before a race," he said. "You should have pancakes the morning of the race; you have to eat something that will stay with you.

"But you can't have anything fatty or dairy products. Milk will sour on you."

Morgan said he's found some marathon traditions die hard.

"The night before, they have big spaghetti dinners," he said. "You really have to load up on pasta. So, last night I went and cooked a big spaghetti dinner," he laughed. "The night before the marathon you gotta have pasta."

Morgan said his most memorable part of the Boston Marathon was Wellesley Hills.

"The first time I ever ran Boston," he recalled, "I was running with a guy from Japan and we got to Wellesley Hills and the Wellesley College girls lined up along the roadway so that only the two of us could get through abreast and they cheered and they screamed. They scream for everybody.

"I remember, and I'm not embarrassed to say it," he added, "I actually broke down and just started crying as I was runnning, I couldn't believe it.

"You know, it didn't make any difference whether you were in first place or you were four-thousandth.

"There were just hundreds of them, Wellesley girls. It's a very famous part of the race. It's just incredible. I think any person who's ever run the marathon, and you ask them what they remember most, they're going to say the Wellesley girls.

"Heartbreak Hill is always fun to watch," he said. "You think, Oh my God, why did I ever want to do this. Actually, Heartbreak Hill is not one hill, there's four hills there. It's at 20 miles.

"You know, they talk about 'the wall'. All of your bodily stores supposedly have been used by this time, around 20 miles it happens.

"It's another place where you get inspired by people," he said, "because they cheer you on.

"There are so many stories that take place within the marathon," he said. "That gentleman who pushes his son in the wheelchair, you know he does triathlons. He swims and pulls his son on a sled and then he has a bicycle with a carriage on the back. You see things like this and boy, it just makes you think you can do anything.

"Marathons are great," Morgan said. "You finish and you just go (splat). Then you go right to bed."

But he added that he believes the race of the

Chiropractic for HEALTH

by Dr. Kevin M. Neill, Chiropractic Physician

THE COMPRESSION FRACTURE

A fracture can occur in perfectly healthy bone. A typical spinal break is the compression fracture. It results from a downward crushing force on the spinal column. In healthy bone, this most often occurs as a result of violent trauma. It may be from an automobile accident, a serious fall or an attempt to stop a heavy object from falling. At such times, enormous force can be exerted against the vertebral bodies. One or more may crack. The typical compression fracture shows up on X-rays as a wedge-shaped break line. It sometimes is accompanied by herniation of one or more neighboring discs and can be agonizingly painful. As long as there are no complications, such as an injury to the nerve roots or spinal cord, it can respond to proper care.

Through the spinal cord and nerves pass the most important instructions for one's well-being. An important consideration of chiropractic is to keep this communication alive and well and free from points of interference. To discover how chiropractic can serve you and your well-being, please call the COHASSET CHIROPRACTIC OFFICE, 760 Chief Justice Cushing Hwy., Suite 12, today. We have the methods to get the message across that will help to enhance your lifestyle and healthstyle. Tel. 383-1211, 1214.

HINT:

A violent fall may push a vertebrae out of proper alignment resulting in a "subluxated facet."

Triathlon athlete completes marathon

future is the triathlon.

"There's nothing I've ever done that is crazier than the start of a triathlon," he said.

"The gun goes off and you've got a thousand people in the water at once, all heading toward a buoy half-a-mile away. The beach is this wide," he said, spreading his arms, "and everyone's converging on this little buoy."

"Every fourth stroke you take a sighting stroke to see where you're heading," he explained. "I've been swimming and I've looked up and seen a guy swimming absolutely perpendicular to where I was going. People were just out of control."

Morgan said his first couple triathlons were brutal, "but after that, you learn to get up front," he added. "Good swimmers have an advantage, because they can get out and they don't have to worry about people crawling over them and kicking them in the head."

Despite such inconveniences, Morgan maintains that the triathlons give more people a chance to compete at a level where they can do well, because there is more than athletic element to the event.

"No matter how hard we train," he said, "neither you nor I are going to go out and compete with Bill Rodgers or Joanie Benoit. We just can't do it.

"Those people are born marathoners. They're 5'11", weigh 135 pounds and their legs come up to here." He pointed to his chest.

"Look at Bill Rodgers," he said. "He's all legs. He's built to be a marathoner, whereas I'm sure that I wouldn't fear him at all on a bicycle. I wouldn't fear him in the water either.

"If we did a triathlon, I don't think he would have a chance against me," Morgan challenged.

"But when we get out running, I'd never see him.

"I race bicycles," he said. "My first love is racing bicycles. In running, I never see the pace car, but in bike racing, I'm able to compete at a level where sometimes there's just the pace car in front of me and I know there's 250 to 300 bikes behind me.

"I know they're all chasing me and I'm sure that these runners get the same feeling. There's just something about being out there in the lead," he said.

"There's nothing more exciting than finishing a triathalon."

Morgan reminisced about his last marathon.

"It was the Octoberfest Marathon," he said. "They had about 3,000 people and it was through the streets of Boston.

"It was the week after the Beirut bombing. I was in the Marines for four years. I'm a combat veteran and I got so emotionally involved in it. I took this flag," he said, pulling out a Marine Corps flag, "and I made a staff and I carried it the whole 26 miles.

"I didn't do it for publicity or anything," he explained. "I did it because I was a former Marine and there were 256 guys who were just killed.

"At the beginning of the race, they had the announcer ask for a moment of silence, meditation for the Marines who had been killed. I was able to hold the flag and just wave it overhead. It was a pretty inspirational moment for me.

"I ran the whole thing," he added, "and people were really great to me; they would come up and say Do you want me to carry it? And I'll help you, because it did get a little heavy after a while. But I didn't want anybody else carrying it. I just wanted to do it all myself.

"I usually can do about a three-hour marathon," he said, "but this took me four hours. And as I was coming in, the announcer announced my arrival and I got so emotional. I just choked up coming in.

"That was the point in my life when I said, I'm not running another marathon again. Now I'd just as soon sit and watch them and enjoy them."

Students cancel European trip plans . . .

Jay Marsac is one of the students who overcame his fear and decided to make the journey to France. His mother, Lucy, said after the parent-teacher meeting they talked about the situation and the options.

"It was a real hard decision," she said. "We worried about it a lot. But we finally decided that it was a wonderful opportunity for Jay and if he was comfortable with it, we would be too. If he simply said, 'period, I'm not going, I would have said 'fine.' At the meeting last Tuesday night, Mr. Fortin said he felt concerns, too. He was not particularly reassuring and he never said not to worry. He said they would keep a low profile.

"I guess we just followed Jay's stance. He decided he wanted to go and we decided it would be a wonderful opportunity. I feel comfortable with that."

Mrs. Marsac noted, "I honestly feel we'd worry about him in the best of circumstances. But on the otherhand, it was a wonderful opportunity, and a chance to see a foreign land. Losing the money from the trip was not really a concern. Money was not the point. You get to the point where you're talking about a life and money doesn't matter."

Jay's mother noted the tenth grader paid for his trip expenses from money he earned in his paper route and by cutting neighbors' lawns.

Although happy that her son arrived safely in Paris, Mrs. Marsac added, "I can't wait until he's home."

Tracy Lowenhagen cancelled her scheduled flight to England this week. She was going with four or five other Cohasset students with Jo-Ellen Wood from the high school. A dual decision by student and parent was made last week to forfeit the money and cancel the vacation.

Mrs. Lowenhagen said the decision was made last Wednesday. "We decided that although it was probably safe, it was unpredictable. There were too many concerns."

It was the concern that never faded from their thoughts that forced the Lowenhagens to break off the plans.

"Tracey worked two jobs after school and on weekends to earn money for this trip. But she expressed the concern. There was a lot of talk in the school about not letting fear run our lives. We strongly urged her to make her own decision. You know, if this had occurred only two weeks later, we could have assessed the situation much better and more clearly." Mrs. Lowenhagen noted.

Eleventh grader Kathy Haase decided not to make her scheduled trip to England this week with Mrs. Wood. "With all the stuff happening in Libya, I didn't want to be walking around scared and worried the whole time," she said.

Kathy planned the trip since she paid for it in December. Although her parents paid for the vacation, she was working since early March and planned to reimburse them for half the costs.

"My parents made it clear that the money didn't bother them," she said this week. "They said not to worry about not getting the money back."

Although she eagerly anticipated the vacation, Kathy was not greatly disappointed in her decision to cancel. "I'd rather be here with my friends than walking around scared in England," she said. She knows of one close friend who cancelled her England vacation, too, and one who refused to be swayed from her original plans.

"I know I wouldn't have enjoyed it," Kathy noted. "I would be too scared. I've had worse disappointments. Right now, I'm having a good vacation spending time with my friends here."

Teachers Association sponsors bike ride

The Cohasset Teachers Association will sponsor the 15th annual Ride-A-Bike-for Retarded Citizens Sunday — May 18, from 1 to 4 p.m.

This is part of a state-wide effort by the Massachusets Teachers Association who support the Massachusetts Association for Retarded Citizens and its affiliates. The MTA dollar contributions have revolutionized services for almost 200,000 mentally retarded children and adults.

Over $2 million dollars has been raised over the years through this campaign. These funds help the human, civil and legal rights of the retarded citizens of the Commonwealth. Registration forms are available at all three schools: Junior/Senior High School from Mr. Plante; Deer Hill School from Mr. Deakin; and Joseph Osgood School from Mrs. Tewksbury.

If you wish to participate in the ride, please have sponsors pledge the amount of money they wish to donate per mile. ☐ The Wheelwright family had a huge birthday "bash" last weekend, to honor Ruth Wheelwright's ninetieth birthday. Imagine how proud Mrs. Wheelwright must have felt as she looked around on her big day . . . her four children, nine grandchildren, nine great-grandchildren, and one great-great grandchild were all present for the festivities! Count 'em, that's five generations. Congratulations to you and a very happy birthday from all of us!

☐ Dorothy Bates a former teacher at CHS was recently notified of her selection as the recipient of the Bridgewater College Alumni Award for Outstanding Service to the Association and the Members of her Class. The award will be presented to Mrs. Bates at Bridgewater College Alumni Day on Saturday, May 3. Dorothy, who graduated from Bridgewater in 1930, taught in the Quincy Public School System for 14 years. She had also taught mathematics in the Cohasset Jr.-Sr. high school for 24 years before her retirement in June, 1985. She has served on many class committees at Bridgewater along with being a member of the Omega Iota Phi Sorority, having served as its Treasurer and Chairman of the group's scholarship committee. Mrs. Bates is presently a member of the School's 150th Reunion Celebration which is scheduled for 1990. It will honor the founding of the Bridgewater campus. Two of her three daughters are graduates of the college, and according to Dot, "I have always felt and have told others that the education I received from Bridgewater was inspiring." She went on to add, "this education has proved invaluable to me throughout my very active teaching career."

☐ Congratulations to Tim Libby who had his own "Masters" last Sunday with a hole in one at the Cherry Hill Country Club, Amherst, Mass. Timmy was playing in the foursome of Mike Curley, Chuck Good and Jay McNeill.

☐ Another successful Gaslight Tennis Social was held at the Cohasset Tennis Club on April 11 for neighbors and friends of Ledgewood Estates (Brewster, Ledgeway, Woodway, and Ledgewood Drive). Thirty players competed for the top prizes (T-shirts that proclaim the wearers "1986 Gaslight Champs"). Winners were Collen Roth and Pat Hurley. The coveted "Paul Robey Award for Distance and Accuracy" was awarded to Kathy Walsh. The trophy will be displayed proudly in Kathy's new family room until next year's tournament when another lucky winner will be announced. The Robeys and Sullivans hosted this year's event and wish to thank everyone who participated and brought delicious appetizers and desserts. They disappeared quickly after the matches, along with one of J. Bildner's super (four foot long) subs.

☐ Speaking of disappearing, the Ledgewood Estate residents would love to get their neighborhood's wooden Brewster Road sign back. It would be great if it re-appeared as quietly as it left!

☐ An update on Peter Lawrence, who you read about competing in the Junior Olympics in March. He skied to an overall nineth place finish! Peter is a J3 with the USSA. He will be traveling to Mt. Hood Oregon, with his coach for a two-week summer race camp in August. Skiing can surely be a year round sport for those dedicated racers! Especially in Colorado, where they are still experiencing spring snow storms . . . here's hoping they keep it all right there, the green grass looks just fine, right?

Bildner Market nearly put on ice

James Bildner nearly had his supermarket put on ice last Wednesday, April 16, because his store was using its produce cooler six months after the planning board told it not to.

"If you hadn't shown up tonight," Chairman Christine Bassett told him, "Building Inspector Edward Poskus would have gone over and put a chain on your door."

Bassett told Bildner his store was violating its building occupancy permit by operating the cooler.

When Bildner bought the market last year, he found he had to replace the existing coolers. Bassett said the replacements were larger than the original coolers and violated the site plan.

The store will not be allowed to use their coolers until their site plan is reviewed and approved.

In November, the board had allowed Poskus to issue the occupancy permit to Bildner under the condition that the cooler not be used until a site plan is approved. "They were in a hurry to open before the holidays," Bassett explained.

"Get going," she urged the store owner. "Put in your site plan, I'd like to have it no later than June 1."

Bildner agreed to deliver the plan by then.

"This doesn't have to be an adversarial process," board member Robert Sturdy said. "We can be cooperative."

The planning board further complained about landscaping at the site. Bassett reported when she discovered the cooler violation, she found an "unacceptable" mess behind the store.

She said she saw two dumpsters overflowing with rubbish and construction debris littering the lot.

She suggested the store invest in a trash compactor, as well as a gravel driveway and screening.

Sturdy said he is especially concerned with the parking lot. "I am not just necessarily interested in seeing it repaved," he said, "I want to see the appearance improved."

Bildner said he agrees that the lot's appearance needs to be upgraded, but told the board those plans were put on hold while the store's septic system was dug up and repaired.

Sturdy suggested the store remove the kiosk in the lot and add some greenery. "I want it to look modern," he said. "Not like it's 1950."

Sturdy indicated he would be willing to accept a reduction in the number of parking spaces for the sake of appearance.

"I want to make it viable as a business area," he said. "This board is genuinely concerned with the business climate in this town."

Bombing hits home

The bombing by U.S. planes along the shores of Tripoli last week has hit home.

With terrorist alerts posted throughout the world, Americans have been warned of the dangers of traveling abroad. The aftereffects of last week's retaliatory hit has struck home, and several of our young students have been left holding the baggage. Literally.

What was envisioned as the vacation dream of their young lives has been cancelled because of international mayhem.

Many Cohasset students were expected to depart New York this week to separate vacations in France and in England. Some of those students never boarded their flight.

After meetings held with trip sponsors and parents last week, many students decided to detour their plans for a week-long stay in Europe. It was a difficult decision made by student and parent. And it was just as disconcerting to those students who decided to travel despite their anxiousness.

There was a lot of talk in the corridors of Cohasset High School last week that fear should not run our lives. Some students sided with that opinion and decided to follow through with their long-anticipated plans.

Others, haunted by the almost daily occurrences of outrage and incident at international airports, decided to forfeit their finances and cancel the long-awaited vacation plans. These are the students who worked weekends and after school to earn money for the trip. It dashed their dreams and reminded them that even at such a young age, they are indeed citizens of a world with all the concerns and confrontations associated with that title.

One parent said, "If only the bombing hadn't occurred last week, then we wouldn't have been so concerned." But the circumstances did occur, and our children are paying the consequences.

It's not fair to say some parents are wrong, and some were correct. They all considered the options and together parent and child made a decision. We cannot fault anyone, except the international conditions that fueled this situation.

How unfair this is to our children. The crisis has hit home, and our children are suffering the aftershock.

This may have been their first lesson, their introduction to life in a complex world. We wished them a life filled with peace and understanding. We welcomed them into a world we hoped would be brimming with love and goodwill.

Instead, we have nurtured a climate of unrest, where hate and distrust thrive. This is the legacy our children have inherited.

Let's see some active democracy

Letters

To the Editor:

Life is easy, safe, and comfortable in this country, in part because of the wealth of natural resources, but also because it is a country of law and order. For the common good, rules have been established — such as those governing pollution and the means to abate it and prevent it. The government has established agencies to administer the rules and to disperse helpful funding which was collected from us all by taxation.

People being less than perfectly idealistic, there always will be attempts to gain the maximum funding with the least compliance — and we rely on the government agencies to see that the broad public interest is protected against the excesses of self interest. Otherwise, our disbursements would be beyond our means, and what they are supposed to achieve would not be achieved. Public Works certainly is a mildly socialistic idea — but even the Far Right accepts its benefit.

In our town, we have disdained to accept the rules that should apply to everyone on the grounds that "home rule" determines, and display a liking for vociferous charges that it is the government agencies that "ignore the intent of Congress, violate the Clean Water Act" and similar bologna. But we also have many people who know that our course is wrong but are unwilling to stand up against the popular. They expect government eventually will straighten the matter out and they will not have to take a stand.

That lassitude is a dangerous betrayal of law and order. It is as bad as parents who no longer believe it their responsibility to discipline and guide their children, and place all the responsibility on the schools. Neither schools nor government agencies should have to act without the responsible assistance of the people. Let's see some active democracy— which means standing up rather than drifting silently.

Now if that dewey-eyed appeal to public spiritedness doesn't grab you, how about self-interest? Our counter productive squabbling with DEQE may delay our fix beyond the period when grants are available, then we'll have to settle for loans.

The town of Orleans is fortunate that common sense triumphed, after being derailed briefly, and they built a tried-and-true sewage treatment plant. In Cohasset we got sidetracked by the proponents of "innovative alternatives". Well, trying to do it on the cheap didn't work out and we've got nothing. While we fumbled, Orleans got the funding money that would have built our plant. Reminds me of the screwballs who oppose central station electric generating plants and preach windmills, solar voltaics and fermented chicken manure as power sources.

Those who have satisfactory systems, or who are willing to live with an unsatisfactory system, or who are not in the area to be sewered, or for some ideological reason prefer that nothing be done as long as possible, had better recognize that the town's problem ultimately must be addressed properly, to the satisfaction of DEQE and our own Board of Health. And the solution isn't getting cheaper with delay. Transient residents who expect to escape before the chickens come home to roost can serve their self interest by leaving ahead of time, but the rest of us had better start paying attention. Not blind and stubborn support, but intelligent attention.

The petition mentioned in last week's letter (for a quick reanalysis before plunging into the Hull drain) is now available for signature. Contact Lloyd Prescott if interested. Home: 383-1379; Office: 589-5265.

Committee should consider consolidation

To the Editor:

While I do not intend to berate the subject (i.e., turning this correspondence into a weekly Mariner letter) I hope the school committee will seriously look at consolidation this year. At the PSO candidates' forum then school committee candidate Chris Ford lamented the lack of use of our fine CHS shop facility. The larger reason it is unused, is not lack of interest. It's a lack of students.

I can envision a bustling, busy high school full of our very own students, 5-12. I can see Jean Brown's kids utilizing the shop, the home economics room, our excellent art and music departments. And I can see all this happening without strife or turmoil.

I have spoken to a lot of people (approximately 778) over the last few months about consolidation, and once it is presented in a positive light, even Joseph Osgood School parents (some of them) admit there's little and nothing threatening about K-4 at Deer Hill School. Many positive, educational things could happen through consolidation, if the school committee will only consider it. I'm afraid if the committee does not consider consolidation, we may end up with even less than the 1,090 students projected for 1990. I think even more and more students will be seeking out private schools, not because of an inferior teaching staff or because our administrative staff or school committee has been uninterested in quality education . . . simply because a larger educational group provides more opportunity. And I'm not sure how healthy a system with 800 or 950 kids spread among three schools would be. Cold, perhaps. Definitely lonely.

Many people have spoken about a future need to regionalize. But we are the smallest system in the area . . . and surrounding systems would like to absorb us. We would not be able to absorb their larger numbers.

How and if the school committee deals with this is critical, from a public education standpoint. There's nothing wrong with being small. Milton and Derby Academy classes are small, and they seem to be able to do it all. We are already a small, excellent system. There is no reason why we can't emulate the private school systems where many Cohasset parents already send their children.

For the time being, it appears we are going "back to the future." There may even come a time when Cohasset Public Schools becomes Cohasset Public School, and educates our children in one building.

Last summer I came across a book at Paul Pratt

School Committee should consider consolidation

Library which discussed the many artificial efforts made by societies throughout history, in an effort to curtail (or deal with) their population. The English have always married late (women in their mid-30s); and present Chinese leaders have promulgated a law by which families are only permitted to produce one child.

In the United States we have no population restrictions, and yet we find ourselves with not enough children to fill our schools. Our problem is so insignificant, it isn't even a real problem. The most terrible thing which might happen to us is that we turn over an elementary school for senior citizen housing . . . that we utilize our real estate for the growing elderly population who need that housing, as opposed to utilizing it for our children, who no longer can fill all the space we created for them.

I wish the school committee well in its endeavor to maintain quality education and create educational opportunity during these times. I hope they will use the School Improvement Act to recognize our teachers; and I hope they will be able to solve our scheduling dilemmas. As parents, we must all continue to lend our ideas, our time and our talents in assisting the school committee in its endeavor.

Congratulations to Diana Kornet on her re-election, and to Chris Ford on his election to the school committee. I would like to remind them and citizens that many people throughout the community are working on behalf of education. The fact that some of us disagree on how to maintain quality education has nothing to do with the basic premise which we all agree with—which is to provide a quality education for our children.

Mitman thanks Cohasset voters

To the Editor:

I'd like to publicly thank the voters of Cohasset for their support at the polls on April 12.

I would also like to comment on the statements in The Mariner article on the election, particularly the implication that my campaign was low key, evidenced by public signs appearing in town only two days before election.

First, your statement slights the numerous people in Cohasset who contributed financially and with their time and effort to help me top the list of candidates for Selectman. Both Bob Ciciotte as Chairman and Robin Lawrence as Treasurer coordinated these activities, but there were numerous others who handled publicity, mailings and the hundreds of calls made to promote the campaign and get out the vote.

Secondly, the fact that signs were put out only two days before the election was intentional, since I reluctantly agreed to use them only because other candidates did. I put the use of political signs in yards in the same category as plastic pink flamingos and cement black jockeys. My preference would be to make the building permit for political signs prohibitively expensive so no candidate would clutter up the town landscape.

Cliff Mitman

School appointments deserved public discussion

To the Editor:

After having spent six years as a member of the Cohasset School Committee, five of which I served as chairman, I feel I must voice my opinion concerning the recent actions of the School Committee — the appointments of a Superintendent and assistant Superintendent by "promotion". Surely each member of the Committee realizes that the single, most important vote a school committee person takes is that of selecting an educational leader. To suggest that these appointments did not call for discussion or community input is to insult the intelligence of the townspeople. This statement is not a judgment of those appointed, but rather a strong statement of disapproval concerning the method of appointments. I must further ask why a "nation-wide" search is being conducted to fill the principalship of Cohasset High School? Cohasset has historically enjoyed a fine academic reputation. Do we really need a major shake-up? With declining enrollment, strict budget limits and increasing concern for communication, the school system and town would be well served as it has been for the past twenty-five years, by the appointment of Gino DiGirolamo as Principal. Mr. Di is respected by both students and parents as a dedicated teacher and administrator. His educational background, credentials and recommendations fully qualify him for this position. Mr. Di knows our children, our system, its strengths and weaknesses and our expectations as parents and taxpayers. Obviously, he wants to continue to serve Cohasset, with the opportunity of strengthening our system. I wish to join the many townspeople, students and his fellow educators who have expressed endorsement of his candidacy.

Elizabethan Companie to perform "The Rivals"

Like Jacques Brel, the Elizabethan Companie is alive and well and performing in Hingham.

Revived after a hiatus of three years with last spring's presentation of "The Importance of Being Earnest," the Companie is rehearsing a new production, Richard Sheridan's classic comedy, "The Rivals" at the Wilder Hall, Main Street in Hingham.

"Wilder has a perfect little stage," Judy Holmes of Hingham, the Companie director, says with great enthusiasm. "Scenery can be flown and there is surprising depth and wing space. There are even two dressing rooms backstage!" Restrictions imposed by founder, Martin Wilder, limit the building's use to South Hingham residents only. "I'm so delighted I am one!" Judy sighs happily.

The Elizabethan Companie (originally called the Elizabethan Companie of Waytes and Players) originated in 1974 by John Holmes (no relation to Judy Holmes) in Hingham's new North Church, with the presentation of "Eizabethan Masque."

Attracted to the group by the advertisement because it was in "proper Elizabethan English," Judy Holmes and her husband, Derek, joined the Companie.

Judy was Queen Elizabeth to Derek's Rawley and, during rehearsals they coached some of the other actors as well. Later, Judy was asked to direct for the Companie. A professional actress, Judy was surpised to learn she enjoyed working with amateurs: "I love to direct. I love to see talent blossom," she says.

During the Masque, Judy met a group of high school students who wanted to do classical theatre, prompting her to found the Cameo Players. This company went into the schools with scenes from Shakespeare, "which, my actors were anxious to perform and the children were anxious to see," she adds.

The following year, Holmes was invited to take over the Companie. Drawing on the nucleus of her Cameo Players, she rounded up additional adults —even "grabbed them off the streets!" she laughs. And so, "Twelth Night," performed on the actual date, was presented in the New North Church, and, "despite no real publicity and a snow storm," elicited a gratifying response.

After that, "Hay Fever" was produced, "Romeo and Juliet," "As You Like It," "Blithe Spirit," The Taming Of The Shrew" . . . nine shows in all.

"Our audience is wide-spread, coming from not only the South Shore, but Boston and other environs as well," Holmes states.

There is a general lack of classical productions in this area. There is not another company doing the classics, she maintains. Many local groups offer modern plays and musicals, but no classical theatre.

Holmes explains, "kids don't read classics these days. They need something to set modern plays against. To have a choice, a balance, to hone the tools, find the judgment as to whether a modern play will itself someday become a classic."

"The Rivals is one of the easier ones to stage and for the people to accept," Holmes says. "It is not too foppish, not as artificial as the Restoration comedies, for example. And Sheridan's plays endure: genuine wit is never dated; his plays give us a life of another time; the style and manners of a bygone day. And, Sheridan's characters are real: one can easily relate to them. Sheridan's characters are real people, with a little edge to them to make them funny . . . Lydia Languish — so romantic . . . and Faulkland, the jealous suitor . . . "

The director is delighted with her cast: "I have players who are thinking, not just performing!"

The audience will find new wrinkles creasing Sheridan's brow: the set will not be representational; Mrs. Malaprop will not be protrayed as the usual bossy woman, but rather as a vague and fatuous one. There will be singing during set changes as well as interspersed in the show (one of the actors was trained at the Eastman School of Music). "Even my actors don't know that yet," Holmes giggles.

Produced by Judy Hardy, "The Rivals" will be performed at Wilder Memorial Hall May 16, 17, 23 and 24. Curtain is a 8 p.m.

Tickets are $6 and will be available by mid-April at the Hingham Square Bookshop, the Hingham Library, or call: 545-7046 (after 3 p.m.).

Rabbi Stephen Karol prepares for Passover

By John O'Donnell
Mariner Staff

"Passover is a holiday that celebrates freedom," says Rabbi Stephen Karol of Congregation Sha' Aray Shalom.

"It is particular in celebrating the Israelites' freedom from bondage in Egypt," he said, "but it is also a universal celebration for freedom for all people."

Congregation Sha' Aray Shalom and Jews all over the world are celebrating Passover this week. "It is a time to examine the world," said Rabbi Karol, "and considers the plight of oppressed people everywhere."

Rabbi Karol said that during the Seder feast of the first day of Passover his congregation will look at persecuted people from all over.

"One of the Seder readings has to do with Jews in the Soviet Union," he said. "We're also including readings about other oppressed people.

"The Passover holiday expresses the hope that all people will be free from oppression," said Rabbi Karol.

Congregation Sha' Aray Shalom includes 210 families who worship at the congregation's synagogue in Hingham.

"The majority of the congregation comes from Hingham," Rabbi Karol said, "but we have people from all over the South Shore."

Rabbi Karol came to Sha' Aray Shalom in 1981 from Temple Beth Zion in Buffalo, NY.

"Contrary to what people say, we've found New Englanders to be very friendly and helpful," said Rabbi Karol. "One reason we came here was because we felt we knew the people here longer than we actually did. We felt very comfortable coming here.

"Another reason we came here was because the prospect for growth was good," he said. "We had a very good sense, just a nice feeling, about the congregation here."

Sha' Aray Shalom, which in Hebrew means Gates of Peace, became a congregation in 1978, Rabbi Karol said.

"There was a group of people in the late 1950s meeting at the Hingham Shipyard who dissolved in the mid-1960s," he said.

"A core of Hingham families continued to meet at the Old Ship Church in the late 1960s," he said, "and eventually the congregation was formed."

The synagogue was completed in 1980, and Rabbi Karol said that the congregation's recent growth might necessitate expansion.

Congregation Sha' Aray Shalom is a member of the Reform movement of Judaism.

"The reform movement encourages diversity," Rabbi Karol said. "It encourages exploring tradition, studying tradition and making a choice based on knowledge.

"We regard Jewish law as guidance, not governance," he said.

Rabbi Karol said that there are advantages in both Reform Judaism and the more strict Conservative and Orthodox branches.

"The advantage of a strict interpretation is that you know exactly what's expected of you and exactly what you have to do," he said.

"The advantage in the Reform movement is that there is diversity, said Rabbi Karol. "The Reform movement does not encourage rejecting tradition, but we don't expect people to follow every tradition."

Rabbi Karol said education is an important part of his work.

"We start the children as early as age two, with parent-taught workshops on Jewish holidays and basic education," he said. "They then move on to preschool, one Sunday a month for ages three through five.

Karol said that children in kindergarten through seventh grade attend a weekly Sunday School, and start Hebrew School in third grade.

Bar mitzvahs for males and bat mitzvahs for females are celebrated in the seventh grade.

Education is not limited to the congregation's young people," said Rabbi Karol.

"We have a small but dedicated group of adults who are studying the Torah, the first five books of Moses, in tremendous detail," he said. "We've been doing it a long time, and we're only halfway through Exodus. We're being very thorough."

Rabbi Karol and his wife Mary live in Hingham with their seven month-old daughter Samantha.

Prelude concert series . . .

The Boston Camarata will highlight the 350th Prelude Concert Series at 8 p.m. May 3 at Scituate High School.

In honor of Scituate's 350th anniversary, the Prelude Concert Series will begin its 1986-87 fifth anniversary season with the presentation of the renowned Boston Camerata's "Roots of American Music" program on Saturday, May 3, at 8 p.m. at Scituate High School.

An exploration of the early Hispanic, Gallic and Anglo-Saxon music of the New World; Cathedral music of South America; Canadian adaptations of French Renaissance popular songs, and folk polyphony from the Southern United States, this program provides a delightful musical genealogy.

Combining "historical respect with entertainers' instincts in a concert of rare insight and communication" (Chicago Tribune), this performance promises to be a fitting tribute to the town's year-long historic celebration.

Acclaimed as ". . .one of America's finest and most imaginative early music ensembles," the Boston Camerata, directed by Joel Cohen, enjoys an international reputation for excellence.

This concert is funded in part by a grant from the Massachusetts Arts Lottery, as administered by the Scituate Arts Council.

Tickets for this performance, at $10 each, may be reserved in advance by calling 545-0238, or writing to Prelude, Box 109, North Scituate 02060.

State letter . . . .

problem, and we were going to have to do something."

The selectman viewed the state's current letter as "an alert. It's something to be concerned about, but I don't view it as serious as a threat."

Housing authority chairman John Muncey said the members have been trying since 1983 to obtain housing funds for the town. "But the amount the state allocates for its programs falls far short of what we can afford in Cohasset. So we don't get the money," he said this week.

Rents in Cohasset begin at $700 a month, he noted, and the state guidelines of a $200 monthly allocation "fall far short. So we're ineligible.

"The state wants their cake and eat it too," he continued. "We fully understand the state wants low income housing in Cohasset, but check this territory. Maybe in East Oshkosh you can subsidize housing for $200 a month, but not in Cohasset."

The housing authority, he said, continually submits applications for state subsidy. The Section 8 funds are in place, Muncey said, which allows local landlords to rent housing to people through the state program. The applications are sent to the state through the housing authority.

The authority was recently granted an EOCD grant totaling $315,000 for the rehabilitation of Cohasset's 64 units of housing for the elderly.

"We apply for funding we think we are eligible for," Muncey explained. "We have no set housing plan, we just apply as we can."

There is a plan by local developer Wayne Sawchuk to develop 36 units of moderate and low income housing for elderly residents. That program will be funded through the federal TELLER project. "But," Muncey noted, "we were just notified that the state has no money. A month ago they informed us there will be funding under the TELLER program. Then they have the audacity to send us this letter."

The housing authority chairman said his group would like to develop affordable housing for the town. "With the cost of housing in Cohasset, the young kids can't afford to live here. But we are back to the old story. The state wants to get the most for their buck, and they won't find that in Cohasset."

Muncey said soon after selectmen signed the executive order in 1983, the housing authority members met with officials from EOCD. "We told them then what we were up against in Cohasset as to the cost of housing," he said.

The EOCD letter to selectmen stated the application for Chapter 705 family housing was not fundable. "The application contained no commitment to new construction, identified no possible sites, and mentioned no local contributions. They were all elements which would have given the application a chance of being funded."

The state reiterated if the town is willing to sign a new memorandum of agreement with EOCD, and agree to develop a specific housing strategy for the town, "then EOCD may waive the determination against the community" and not withhold state grant funding.

Selectman Mitman said the state's letter "is an alert that something has to be developed. It is something we should be concerned about."

"Our view is that the housing authority should take the lead on the issue," he continued. "They are going to have to do more than make applications. We've got to sit down with the housing authority and the planning board and commit ourselves to abiding by this executive order."

Pre-registration will be required and the number of participants will be limited. There will be a charge of $10 per family.

Leaking fishing boat runs aground off harbor

A 48-foot commercial fishing vessel, Orient E, began taking on water about noon Saturday in the midst of six-to-eight-foot-high seas and deliberately ran aground outside Cohasset Harbor, Coast Guard officials said.

Shortly after 12:30 p.m. Michael Coombs of Beverly telephoned the Coast Guard that he heard a fisherman's call for help. Coombs was listening to Channel 9 on his CB radio at home, according to Richard Martin, executive officer of the Scituate Coast Guard Station.

"The initial call (as to its location) was wrong," said Martin. "The Orient E was 200 yards north of Cohasset Harbor."

The Scituate station sent out its 44-foot light boat, and the Point Allerton Coast Guard Station dispatched its 41-foot utility boat and its 44-footer to assist the vessel, which is owned by George Walsh of Lynn.

One Coast Guard helicopter already aloft dropped a pump to the vessel. Another helicopter was sent from Cape Cod with a second pump, Martin said.

Shortly before 2 p.m., the Scituate vessel arrived at the boat in distress, and a crew member was sent aboard with a third pump.

"He got all three pumps going, and by (3 p.m.) the flooding was under control," he said.

"The tide was coming in and pushed the Orient E farther aground, so the 44-footer put a line on it to hold its position. By (4:25 p.m.) the vessel floated free, and the Coast Guard escorted it into Cohasset Harbor," Martin reported.

"Apparently the vessel was leaking at the keel," he said.

Despite words of advice to say in port, the vessel later limped its way into Scituate Harbor and by Sunday morning was in Green Harbor, tied up at the town pier and taking on water once again, according to one of the assistant harbormasters.

The Orient E pulled into Plymouth Harbor Sunday night, and by Monday the boat was pulled out of the water for repairs at Jesse's Boatyard in North Plymouth.

Martin said the Coast Guard inspected the Orient E for safety. "There was very little we could do. There are very strict rules about terminating a commercial fishing vessel," said Martin.

Art center scholarships

Graduating seniors on the South Shore who have been accepted by a school of fine arts or an accredited art school are invited to apply for one of three scholarships awarded annually by the South Shore Art Center.

The awards to be made by the Center are the $1,000 Fred E. Bergfors Scholarship, the $500 Marion Huse Scholarship and the $200 MacIvor Reddie Award. Portfolios of original work are to be submitted to the Center, 103 Ripley Road, in Cohasset, on Saturday, May 3 between noon and 1 p.m.

As in the past the scholarships are awarded to assist and encourage students who show the most promise in the field of art to further their art education. Selection of the scholarship recipients will be based on a student's application and portfolio.

All applicants will be informed of the jury's decisions by the South Shore Art Center and the winners of the scholarships will be announced at graduation exercises. The scholarship money will be paid directly to the winners' schools at the beginning of the second semester and will be applied to tuition costs.

The scholarships are open to all students attending South Shore schools — public or private — and who will graduate in 1986. Any questions regarding the scholarships or portfolio requirements may be directed to the Center, 383-9548.

Don't forget to set your clocks ahead Saturday.

☐ Had a note from Regina Schultz, thanking everyone for last year's Cancer Crusade efforts, which they raised almost $3,000 and recieved an award for outstanding participation. April 26-29 this year are the dates to mark when your neighborhood volunteer will be going door-to-door. This year Regina reports that she hopes to do better than last, and she has taken this big responsibility on her shoulders, so help out and give to the Cancer fund.

☐ He wasn't a "townie" in the true sense of the word (that meaning that you have to be born in Cohasset), but he felt as strongly about it! You could often find him picking up the litter on Sandy Beach, helping with the Arts Lottery Council, finding a home for a stray (be it animal or human) . . . he was a frequent sight gabbing downtown, and kept this writer informed of "little tidbits" that he would hear. A true friend, a find person, and a real treasure to have known. Larry Fone, the town of Cohasset will surely not be the same without you.

☐ Health Agent Joseph Godzik has been named Cohasset's representative to the Norfolk County-Newton Lung Association Board of Directors. The association is sponsoring Clean Air week from April 28 to May 4.

☐ Rebecca Patriolia Barry, 9 Cedar Acres Lane, was recently awarded a Master in Business Administration degree from Suffolk University.

Some 210 students were February graduates of the College of Liberal Arts and Sciences and the School of Management.

☐ J. Bildner & Sons has entered into a unique agreement with Uno Restaurants, Inc., owner of the Pizzeria Uno Restaurants, to sell Pizzeria Uno partially-baked and frozen pizzas in all Bildner's stores.

Pizzeria Uno products are now available in different sizes at Bildner stores starting on April 1. Pizzas can be purchased partially-baked and frozen, or, on request at selected stores, they will be baked and sold hot.

☐ Anna Maria Plante and cousin, Maria Elena Dellorfano both of Cohasset will be leaving Sunday to enjoy a four-day all expense vacation in the Bahamas. Thanks to Maria's Dad, Fred M. Dellorfano, of Cohasset, the girls joined the celebration of an "Evening of Stars" Las Vegas Night fund-raiser at Notre Dame Academy in Hingham.

At the close of the evening, Anna Maria put all her "play money" in the game of "21" and WON.....as top "money" winner, this all expense vacation for TWO!!!!!!!April 13th was Anna's 22nd birthday — and what a tremendous present-----

Several weeks ago, Anna won $400 picking the five numbers in the weekly lottery. She missed the mega-bucks number by one digit (she was 21 at the time, and number 22 was drawn). This has been a luck birthday year for her.

A collection of photographs by students at Cohasset High School is on display in the children's room of the Paul Pratt Memorial Library.

Coleen Lucas of the art department said students were encouraged to "use the camera as a sketch book, to be very creative and to express their individual vision."

This show is a prelude to "An evening of Art and Music," a multi-media collaboration between the music and art departments of Cohasset Junior-Senior High School, which will take place in the auditorium on April 15 at 7:30 p.m. Performances and art work by more than 90 students will be featured.

The display for the library was coordinated by Regina Schultz for the Friends of the Library.

Cohasset teacher honored

Joseph Osgood School first grade teacher, Faith Bowker, was awarded a Citation (the second highest award) at the Plymouth County Education Association, Inc. (P.C.E.A.) Annual Awards Banquet, Monday, April 14.

The citation was awarded to Bowker in recognition of her outstanding service to children, the community, and the teaching profession. The award is made to those who have displayed high qualities of leadership important to the improvement of education.

Bowker commented at the awards ceremony, "I've always referred to the P.C.E.A. Annual Banquet as the Academy Awards Night for teachers — and what a truly touching tribute to be nominated by your peers! I thank you all from the bottom of my heart for letting me be a part of a truly amazing group of people. So many times over the years, we have shared special moments together — thank heavens for the light and happy moments together — they are all golden ones!!

Bowker holds a B.A. from Lesley College, Cambridge and an M.A. from Boston State College. She is a member and past president of the Cohasset Teachers' Association and is a member of the Massachusetts Teachers' Association.

A Scituate resident, Ms. Bowker is president, North Scituate Beach Improvement Assoc. She revived this organization six years ago. Bowker is disaster chairman for Scituate-Norwell Red Cross. During the Blizzard of 1978, she set up shelter and for two weeks fed, supervised volunteers, communications, national Red Cross case work.

She was responsible during Hurricane Gloria for visiting fire victims and meeting their immediate needs.

In the Elmira, N.Y. flood, Bowker went as a volunteer to maintain order. She was Disaster Chairperson for two to three week. Bowker was given a leave of absence from Cohasset Schools in order to establish housing, food, clothing.

She served as General Red Cross Chairman from 1981-83. Bowker coordinated all committees (i.e. blood, first-aid, transportation, etc.) at Scituate-Norwell Red Cross.

She is a member of Scituate Beautification Committee appointed by selectmen; St. Francis X. Sodality; Scituate Historical Society; Subscriber to Prelude Concert Series; Friends of Scituate Town Library, hospitality four years and publicity, library arts four years; Scituate Harbor Yacht Club, tennis committee, pool committee, junior program, children program; and the Navy League of Boston 1975-1979.

The actual test will only occupy a small portion of each day followed by a relaxation period.

Each kindergarten teacher will test one half of the class for three days. The other half will be involved with enrichment activities under supervision. There will be time for make-up if a child should miss part of the test.

Group results will be given Wednesday, May 21 at 7:30 p.m.

Business problem solving

Professor Bob Bertone from the Department of Management Analysis and Communication at University of Mass. at Boston visited Edward F. Sheehan's senior psychology class at Cohasset High School Friday, April 11.

Professor Bertone came to Cohasset as part of his University's faculty speakers program.

During the 40 minute class Dr. Bertone gave a lively presentation on management skills needed by middle management people in business today.

Following his brief introduction he had the class divide itself into small groups. He then presented each group with three challenging tasks. The members of the class were introduced to the team concept of problem-solving used in business circles today. Each member of these groups were then given role models to play in the problem-solving process.

Cancer crusaders ready to go

"Team in place and ready to go" is the word from Regina Schultz, chairman of Cohasset's 1986 Cancer Crusade.

The crusade will include each household in town where participants will leave important information about cancer prevention, and ask for a contribution to the work of the American Cancer Society.

In Cohasset, the Crusade will take place between April 25 and April 29. At that time volunteers will make calls on their neighbors to distribute literature and accept contributions.

"Cohasset has always been supportive of good causes," Schultz states, "and I know our townspeople will again welcome their Cancer Crusaders, who are helping to provide the lifeline funds that make possible the Cancer Society's work in the prevention, detection, treatment and service to cancer patients. My thanks go to all Crusaders."

Schultz notes the Crusaders will have material identifying them as representatives of the recognized national agency in the cancer field, explaining that solicitors for other groups may attempt to take advantage of the focus on the annual Crusade.

Fourteen neighborhood captains, including a number who have been active in Crusades in the past, head up the soliciting organization. They are David Chittim, Barbara Hislop, Holly Holway, Carolyn Horn, Kyle Lubitz, Carol Martin, Ann Mitchell, Taffy Nothnagle, Al Odermatt, Joan Pyfrom, Nancy Ripley, Susan Roy, Jane Russell, Nancy Sandell, and Anne Vanderweil.

The captains will be responsible for distributing Crusade kits to 110 volunteers for the house-to-house Crusade and for assisting these Crusaders. They will be making follow-up telephone calls to make sure that the kits are returned by April 30 to the Rockland Trust Company office in Cushing Plaza, where they will be accounted for by Marsha O'Quin, Crusade Treasurer, a long-time worker for the Cancer Society.

The captains received their supply of kits at an informal coffee and dessert, April 17 at Mrs. Schultz home, 109 North Main Street. At that time the final plans for the Crusade were discussed.

This year's information to be distributed focuses on the role of diet in cancer prevention, with house-to-house callers inviting householders to ask "What's Cooking?" The literature includes a folder entitled "Eating to Live...What Food May Help You Reduce Your Cancer Risk".

Cancer crusaders (L to R) Louise Smullen, Regina Schultz and Fran Lindgren assemble crusader kits for the April 25-29 campaign.

Seventh grade letters regarding aid to the contras

As part of their current events curriculum, students in Mrs. Dorothy Wondolowski's seventh grade geography class studied newspaper articles and opinion polls about aid to Contras. As an assignmentthey were asked to submit letters to the editor outlining their position.

Dear Editor,

I think we should support the Contras because we don't want Russia to build up influence in Latin America. Nicaragua is close to the U.S. The government is supporting the Contras so they will stop the spread of Communism and Russian influence.

Many countries to the south of us are poor. If exposed to Communism they will adopt this idea of equal sharing of property; this could include Honduras, Costa Rica and maybe Jamaica. Hopefully, Mexico and Panama will not be infiltrated. If Panama is taken over by the Russians the Panama Canal could be in danger.

Therefore, I think we should spend the $100 million for the Contras. The U.S. and other countries will benefit.

Sincerely,
Andrew Ross

Dear Editor,

I have an opinion about sending the Contras aid. I think that Reagan should send money and Marines. If there is just money sent over I don't think that the money will go to the Contras' Army. Even if it did I think they would lose. I do not feel that 19,000 fighting men can easily defeat 125,000 fighting men. I feel that if we just sent over money it would be a waste. If the Contras had a chance, fine, but if we want to win we must put our troops in.

Sincerely,
Tad Kasperowicz

Dear Editor:

I believe that the United States should mind their own business and not send any weapons to Nicaragua. I say this only because we have our own government and they have their own. They should run theirs as they wish and we shouldn't have a part in it. We do not rule the world, and if a country wants to do something we can't always interfere.

Reagan is so worried about surrounding countries becoming Communists and wanting to attack. I can't understand why.

In World Wars I and II we didn't get invaded or attacked because we are almost surrounded by water. But things are different now. It doesn't matter where you are located because if you have nuclear weapons, you can send them anywhere, even if the country isn't near yours.

Another thing is, we don't even know the plans of the Contras. They could be terrorists, for all we know, planning an attack on the U.S. At least, if Nicaragua is Communist we will have an eye on them. And, finally, if the Contras are terrorists, we will have wasted $100 million to be used against us. This is my point of view on sending aid to the Contras.

Sincerely,
Corey DeSantis

Dead Editor,

I do not think that the U.S. should send aid to the Contras. My reasons are the same as many other people. I think that sending money to other countries isn't fair to the people here who have it bad. When will the U.S.A. come first? When will we start taking care of our own here who are suffering and starving? Also, what about our national deficit? We are already in debt, and I don't think that we can afford to send $100 million to the Contras. The main reason tht I don't want the U.S. to aid the Contras is that I don't want the U.S. to get involved in another war. The thought of what the United States and the Soviets could do with their nuclear weapons scares me. Thank you for reading this.

Sincerely,
Sophie Redfield

Dear Editor,

I feel strongly that we should stop sending aid to the Contras. One reason is because it could result in a war with Nicaragua and the Communist countries in South America. We could get involved in it. We already have problems with Libya right now! We want peace not enemies. Another reason is we have problems here at home (U.S.). We have poor, starving people in the United States who could use the money. Why send money and aid to the Contras if we don't even know it is going into the right hands? For example, much of the money we sent to the Philippines was used by Marcos for pocket money rather than used for the people.

I also feel that it isn't fair. The residents of the U.S. sometimes don't get the correct or full information about what is happening in South America. I think we have a right to know what is going on.

Why don't we mind our own business for a change instead of always getting involved in other people's problems? If we do get involved, like sending aid, a war, like Vietnam could result. I am just a kid saying what I think is right. But who is going to listen to one kid? Maybe if more people felt the way I do, something could be done around here!

Sincerely,
Kristin Martin

Dear Editor,

I would like to say that I support President Reagan's acts in sending money to help fight the spread of Communism. However, I do not feel we should send as much money as we are. These millions of dollars from our pockets are ending up and being used in ways we do not even know about. Let's not end up with another Marcos issue. When we're sure the money is being used for good purposes, we can send as much as we are now.

Also, I do not feel President Reagan is helping the country by sending that much money. There are still financial needs here in the U.S. The large deficit, for example, and even the poverty in our country. If we do not try to help the problems in our own country, there will be nothing left to protect from Communism.

Sincerely,
Jennifer M. Plante

Dear Editor,

I don't think we should send more money to Nicaragua. We don't even know what they did with the money we gave them last time. How do we know who is going to get it? We should start thinking about our own country. When we're in need nobody sends us money. The United States has to feed the people who are out of work, suffering and starving. We also have to give homes to the homeless.

The money we send might not even be useful. What's the sense in sending more if we don't know what they do with it.

Sincerely,
Mark Batts

Dear Editor,

I agree and disagree with Reagan. I agree with the fact that we should try to prevent the spreading of Communism, but I don't think he is going about it in the right way. I believe that we should encourage, not bribe, the other countries. We seem to be saying, "We will give you money and equipment if you choose to be free." That's not how it should be. We should tell them all the advantages of being free. From there they should make the choice. If we have to give them a boost with money, all right. We should make sure, though, the money we give them is being used only for the people and for different economic activities. If we see that it's not being used that way, we should first warn them and then cut down on the money given. They should make the decisions themselves, not have us make it for them.

Emancipation theme highlights Passover holiday

By Marc Sperber

The theme of emancipation - from tyranny, hatred, slavery or genocide -has always been a dominant component of Judaism. Nowhere is this emancipation - and the covenenant with God that underlies it - more joyously celebrated than in the holiday of Passover, which begins this year on the evening of Wednesday, April 23.

The eight-day festival marks the exodus of the Children of Israel from Egypt, but is also a seasonal celebration of the coming of spring. It is, in all its forms, a chance for Jews to reaffirm their volitional dedication to God - for the Exodus was a necessary prelude to the acceptance of the Covenant at Mount Sinai.

Passover (or, in Hebrew, Pesach) is a tale of grand dimensions. About 1800 years before the birth of Christ, the descendants of Jacob, numbering 70 in all, went to "sojourn" in Egypt to wait out the famine in Israel. There they became "numerous and mighty."

Upon realizing that the Jews could represent a threat to his power, the Pharoah, probably Raamses II, decided that the newborn sons of all Jewish subjects would be slain. The Jews in the realm were also placed in bondage, and forced to work at heavy labor.

At this time, the enterprising mother of an infant named Moses decided to evade the edict. She constructed a basket of bullrushes daubed with pitch and put her infant in this makeshift boat upon the Nile. A daughter of the Pharoah, bathing at the river's edge, found the infant and adopted him, raising him as a prince in the royal household.

Moses was found in a basket of bullrushes by the Pharoah's daughter.

This gifted youth, who grew up as an Egyptian aristocrat, awakened to the plight of his Jewish brothers as a young man. Upon killing an Egyptian taskmaster he saw beating a Jewish slave, Moses, fearing retribution, fled to the desert. While living as a shepherd in the wilderness, he came upon the burning bush that spoke God's word to him. He was instructed to return to Egypt and demand the release of the Jews from bondage. A leader was born.

The Pharoah, predictably, was not amenable to Moses' wish. Moses began to doubt his own mission, and God fortified his resolve by allowing him to perform two miracles in the presence of the Pharoah: the transformation of a staff into a serpent, and the turning of the Nile into a river of blood.

But the pharoah would not relent, and Moses began to call forth plagues. Blood, frogs, vermin, flies, murrain, boils, hail, locusts and darkness were each visited in turn upon the Egyptians. But the nine plagues did not soften the Pharoah's heart.

God spoke to Moses again and promised the tenth and final plague. He was told that God would smite the firstborn of every man and beast in the kingdom. Moses was instructed to tell the Jews that they would be spared if each family slaughtered a lamb and spread the blood upon the lintel of its doorframe -- a symbol that would tell God's Angel of Death to "pass over" those homes.

The Jews were also commanded by God to be ready to leave Egypt in great haste. When the Pharoah, finally humbled by events, relented and expelled the Jews, the Children of Israel left quickly, taking with them as provision their loaves of unleavened bread.

From this complex tale the rite of the Seder arose. An elaborate ceremony that uses symbols to connote the elements of the Exodus, the Seder is a central element in the practice of Judaism.

The Seder combines both a meal and a recounting of the events of Moses and the ancient Hebrews. The principal feature of this ritual is the consumption of four foods: Matzah,the flat, unleavened bread of the Exodus; Marror (bitter herbs) to commemorate the bitterness of servitude; eggs and salt water (the juxtaposition of new life with the tears of sorrow; and haroseth, a combination of wine, chopped nuts, apples and cinnamon that connotes the mortar used by the Jewish slaves in their heavy construction tasks.

Participants of the Seder are instructed to eat "in a reclining manner," a posture once originally reserved for the Pharoah and his retinue. Today, most families suffice with a pillow for the chair of the eldest male present.

Each member present at the Seder reads a portion of the Haggadah - the collection of prayers and stories that recounts the struggle of Moses and the flight from Egypt.

The narrative is introduced by the Four Questions, traditionally asked by the youngest member of the company. The first question outlines the significance of the Paasover Seder: "Why is this night different from all other nights?"

Another highlight of the recitation is the "Litany of wonders." It is a cumulative poem reciting the benefits bestowed by God upon the Jews. Not only did He lead them from Egypt, but He provided manna in the desert and gave them his Ten Commandments. Not only did He part the Red Sea, but He permitted the Hebrews to pass through dryshod. The poem's refrain, Dayennu, literally means "it would have sufficed us!"

Moses discovered the wonderment of the burning bush as God instructed Moses to leave Egypt.

The Seder, performed throughout the world for over 3000 years, is not meant as a rote recitation or a modern rationalization. Rather, the true essence of the ceremony is to let each Jew feel himself a part of the enslavement and Exodus.

Thus, the Passover festival, according to the scholar Theodor H. Gaster, has two basic messages for modern man: the first is that deliverance from the scourge of bondage lies just as much in our hands as in God's; and the second message is one of continual deliverance.

Author convinced of Sacco's guilt

By Paula Maxwell
Special to the Mariner

A Sandwich author who will speak at an author's series in Duxbury in May has concluded after much study, that Sacco was guilty and Vanzetti was innocent and the 1920 trial in which the immigrant anarchists were convicted of murder was fair.

Francis Russell in his new book Sacco-Vanzetti: The Case Resolved presents new information that bolsters the view that Sacco died (guilty) as a soldier of the cause (of anarchy) and Vanzetti died innocent although he probably knew of Sacco's role and thus was "an accessory after the fact."

The new information on Sacco's guilt was given to him, he said, by the son of Giovanni Gambera, a friend and longtime defender of the two anarchists.

Gambera was one of the four original members of the Sacco-Vanzetti defense committee, which provided money and moral support for the anarchists during their long trial and appeal in Dedham.

The book, which is published by Harper and Row, is a follow-up to Russell's book published in 1962 on the episode titled, Tragedy in Dedham.

Russell says his view sharply differs from many critics of the trial. He said the pair who were convicted of murder in a Braintree payroll robbery and later executed after a lengthy series of appeals, have been the subject of controversy over whether or not they were guilty or innocent victims of prejudice against aliens and radicals.

"After the first book came out, I got all kinds of letters from people who were interested in the case, including several from Gambera's son."

According to the younger Gambera, Sacco admitted his guilt to Gambera and others who visited him in jail after he was arrested. Sacco reportedly told the defense committee that Vanzetti was not present when the robbery-murder took place outside of the Slater and Morrill shoe factory in South Braintree.

After the confesson Gambera reportedly tried to convince Sacco to plead guilty and save the innocent Vanzetti, "but Sacco refused and Gambera kept silence, as a Sicilian and as an anarchist."

Russell writes that Vanzetti didn't object to Gambera's or Sacco's silence, because "I think they both wanted to die for the cause (of anarchy)."

Russell said the Gambera revelation interested Russell because of Gambera's long and close association with the anarchists and because Gambera's son seemed credible.

"After all, a professor of English and American studies, Gambera had a lot to lose by revealing the secret Gambera kept from almost everyone except his family."

Russell said Gambera shuns the spotlight and will probably be hounded once The Case Resolved comes out.

Another anarchist friend of Sacco and Vanzetti, named Carlo Tresca, professed the innocence of the pair for years, Russell said, then suddenly in 1941, "very angrily" began telling people that Sacco was guilty.

"I'd always thought Tresca came across evidence that Sacco was guilty, that someone from the inside told him that."

He is now convinced that Gambera told Tresca about Sacco's confession when Gambera moved to California in 1941.

All this, added to evidence introduced in the trial, convinced Russell that his first verdict about the anarchists in Tragedy in Dedham remains correct.

Russell, who is a contributing editor to Harvard Magazine, said he became interested in the case when he was called to jury duty for a month in Dedham.

During many hours of spare time between cases, Russell talked with older court officers, the sheriff and others who told him stories about the Sacco and Vanzetti prosecution.

Russell, who was 17 when the execution took place, viewed the jail cell they occupied and began reading the five-volume transcript of the trial which he reread three times during a summer in Maine.

Though reading the transcript shook his conviction that they were innocent, he was still emotionally committed to Sacco and Vanzetti's innocence.

He said by the end of the first draft of writing Tragedy in Dedham he knew he would have to go back and re-write it because he had changed his mind about Sacco.

It was a painful change of mind he said, because he had come to know and like many who had supported Sacco and Vanzetti and for whom the case became a part of their lives.

So. Shore museum inaugurates childrens gallery

By Judith Montminy
Special to the Mariner

A new concept in museum galleries will be inaugurated during Family Fest! at the Brockton Art Museum Fuller Memorial April 26-27.

Workshops and performances will be part of the weekend which helps introduce South Shore children and parents to the new children's gallery and the exhibit, "Spaces and Places." (A calendar of events follows this article.)

The exhibit's curator, Maureen Costello, has been working on the project since last fall in an attempt to broaden the audience base who visits the Brockton museum.

The museum's education department wants local families to see their museum as an alternative to Boston. "We want parents and children to have a good feeling and a good experience in an art museum," Costello said.

What makes "Spaces and Places" different is that the exhibit is an interactive one, allowing children to gain hands-on experiences while building visual skills.

The Tarlow Gallery, the long, windowed gallery visitors follow as they enter the museum, has been transformed into a colorful exhibition area.

Telescopes have been mounted on the windows to enable visitors to discover patterns, shapes and textures in the surrounding environment.

Perspective can be understood through activities which allow children to trace reproductions covered with plexiglass, or to manipulate lights in order to better grasp the importance of light and shadow in the making of an object of art. Frames will be available for use by visitors so they can discover how an artist decides to compose a picture. At the end of the gallery, a cozy book corner has been set up where children can look at and read books about art and artists. Suitcases filled with colorful postcards will take children on visual excursions to other countries and cultures.

The hands-on activities are designed to add to the excitement and understanding of other forms of artwork—paintings, sculpture, and photographs. Emphasis is placed on seeing the real and imaginary world the way artists do. "Spaces and Places" is a self-guided exhibition whose artwork will change every few months.

It is the first exhibit of its kind in this geographical area and has been designed specifically to be "low-tech" according to curator Costello. "We want to focus in on art." Simplicity and elegance in making art is emphasized

The reading corner, at the end of the gallery, offers sculpture games in addition to books and travel suitcases. Although the exhibit is geared to children 6-12 years old, parents with younger children can enjoy the exhibit as well. The reading corner will be stocked with books appropriate for pre-schoolers.

Students from area schools have been visiting the exhibit since March 15, offering comments and suggestions. Special tours for school groups can be arranged by calling the education department (588-6000).

Maureen Costello has been an education consultant at the Museum of Fine Arts in Boston for 10 years, and is acting director of education at the Brockton Art Museum Fuller Memorial through June. She has experience as an art educator and is writing a gallery guide for children. "We are hoping, 'Spaces and Places' will be a tool for realizing this art museum is the major art museum for the South Shore," Costello said.

"Spaces and Places" is the Brockton Art Museum's new gallery devoted to children.

The Brockton Art Museum Fuller Memorial is located on Oak Street in Brockton. Museum hours are Tuesday through Sunday, noon to 5 p.m. Visitors are asked to pay a voluntary admission fee to the museum. There is no additional fee for the "Spaces and Places" exhibit. The program is funded in part by the Massachusetts Council on the Arts and Humanities.

The following is a list of the inaugural activities to celebrate the opening of "Spaces and Places." Workshop registration is limited and tickets are required. Tickets will be available at 12:30 p.m. at the reception desk for the 1 p.m. workshops. All members of the family are invited to participate in the workshops and performances. Refreshments will be served in the cafeteria on both Saturday and Sunday.

SATURDAY, APRIL 26: 1 p.m.-Real and Imaginary Spaces: With an array of wood and other colorful collage materials, create a fanciful world of your own design. Nancy McCallie, museum instructor, auditorium; 1 p.m. Clay is the Way: With clay you can fashion magical kingdoms with real and imaginary creatures. Museum instructors, studio A; 3 p.m.-Off We Go!: A delightful new play by the Whimsey Players. Through music and storytelling the audience is encouraged to journey with a young child as her imagination leads her to wild and wonderful places. Sign language adapted for the hearing-impaired. Auditorium.

SUNDAY, APRIL 27: Jane Schafel-Pace, museum instructor, auditorium; 1 p.m.-Printed Places: Explore the exicting world of printmaking and create a picture of a real or imaginary place. Nancy McCallie, museum instructor, studio A; 2 p.m.-Meet the Artists: Several of the artists whose work is in "Spaces and Places" will be on hand to talk with children and answer questions about their life as an artist, cafeteria; 3 p.m.-Doodling!: The Heart of Gold Vaudeville Company will entertain family visitors with a performance created especially for the opening of "Spaces and Places." There will be music, magic, mime and more! Sign language adapted for the hearing-impaired; auditorium.

Each child who comes to the museum for Family Fest! will receive a "Spaces and Places" passport.

Mastering office skills

By Kathy Touafek
The Words Company, Hingham

How would you like to be a secretary for 50 people; or 100 people? Sounds impossible? As National Secretary's Day (April 24) approaches, those of us in the field of providing secretarial services will stop a moment to consider just a few of the necessary skills that a secretary must master to compete in the automated office of the 1980's.

Gone are the days of simple transcription pads and typewriters. Nowadays a secretary must be qualified to operate state-of-the-art word processing equipment using a multitude of software; must have strong English, grammar and spelling skills; must show technical aptitude in order to operate a multi-functional copying machine, electronic typewriter, ever-changing dictaphone equipment and electronic telephone equipment.

All skills must be exercised continuously, calmly and quickly!

Does this sound impossible? It is, in fact, difficult for many businesses to obtain qualified office help. This can be attributed to a number of factors; 1) the local South Shore business boom which is creating a great demand for secretarial and clerical help; 2) the state's low unemployment rate; 3) the opening of new career opportunities for women in the past decade have decreased the number of trained secretaries entering the marketplace.

There are fewer people to fill the constantly expanding number of available jobs. Qualified secretaries are hard to find and even more difficult to keep. In response to this shortage, more and more businesses are sending their work out to a secretarial service bureau: A (secretarial) company with a professionally trained staff and state-of-the-art office equipment prepared to serve as an alternative to hiring in-house staff.

A professional service bureau can also help with overload secretarial work, vacation coverage or special projects which strain the capability of the in-house staff.

It is, in essence, a company that serves as secretary to 50 or even 100 people on a timely and fully professional basis while providing its own equipment and staff. It is a reliable source that enables a business to stop worrying about all the "loose ends" and get on with business!

On this National Secretary's Day if you use a service bureau or have managed to find and retain a qualified secretary, do more than just send flowers. Stand up, applaud and appreciate all that secretaries and service bureaus do to keep businesses up and running and successful.

Easter column was offensive

Letters

To the Editor:

It was a disappointment to read what I consider a particularly offensive commentary by Darrell Berger, "What Jesus Said About Being Born Again" on March 26. Appearing during the most holy and meaningful week in the Christian calendar, the article seemed to sneer at the character of "born again" Christians.

A person becomes "born again" by faith in the Gospel. The Gospel is the Good News, so often mentioned in the Bible, that Jesus Christ is God made man. He was crucified, dying for our sins, was buried, and, notice, he rose from the dead. Jesus did not stay dead like all the other prophets who professed to be God. Jesus is alive today and sits at the right hand of the Father, and, through the power of the Holy Spirit, is dwelling in each "born again" believer. Why would Jesus die for us? He loves us. He loves us and wants to give us hope for today and hope for the everlasting. These beliefs require faith. It's so simple, so clear, yet people are reluctant to believe, but it is true!

A "born again" believer comes to Jesus Christ in many different ways, but we all, ultimately, embrace the same reality. We are sinners in need of a Savior. When Nicodemus met with Jesus that night, not only was he curious, but, obviously, he felt there was something missing in his life. He had position, wealth and knowledge, but he came to realize this was not enough. He needed a Savior; the brief encounter with Jesus convinced him of this. Surely, if he had not been convinced, why would he go back to help bury the body of Jesus? This showed great courage. When all of Jesus' disciples lost hope and ran away, Nicodemus came through because he was convinced and committed. Although he was uncertain about what to do at the time of the crucifixion, he showed, without a doubt, courage and loyalty to his new-found Messiah.

My response should not be construed as a negative attack on an individual's understanding, or misunderstanding, of terms that may label a particular group of people. What are some of the labels? Born again; born from above; new creature in Christ; alive in the spirit; spirit filled; charismatic; pentecostal; evangelical; Jews for Jesus. We are Baptists, Catholics, Jews, Methodists, Congregationalists, Episcopalians, Presbyterians, etc. We serve the same God in different denominational churches.

No matter what label from the above we may assume, we believe that the Bible is the inspired Word of God; we read it to teach us the truth, to live our lives according to the Word of God, and we believe that Jesus Christ is God. Not some "prophet," a "good, holy fellow, who lived 2,000 years ago! It seems simple to us, but for some, it's difficult to believe when their heart is closed to the truth. The word of God says, "But the man who isn't a Christian can't understand and can't accept these thoughts from God, which the Holy Spirit teaches us. They sound foolish to him, because only those who have the Holy Spirit within them can understand what the Holy Spirit means. Others just can't take it in. But the spiritual man has insight into everything and that bothers and baffles the man of the world, who can't understand him at all. How could he. For certainly he has never been one to know the Lord's thoughts, or to discuss them with him, or to move the hand of God by prayer. But strange as it seems, we Christians actually do have within us a portion of the very thoughts and mind of Christ." 1 Corinthians 3:14-16 (The Living Bible).

"Choose this day whom you will serve; as for me and my house, we will serve the Lord." Joshua 6: 24:15.

'Throwing the baby out with the bath water'

To the Editor:

As a pastor whose congregation covers much of the South Shore, I find it necessary to respond to Darrell Berger's "Nearly Native" column of March 26/27. In his attempt to counter the modern-day phariseeism of what he refers to as "today's new religious right," I fear that Mr. Berger has thrown the baby out with the bath water.

If his point is to teach us that conservative churches tend toward legalism at the expense of meaningful social action, then certainly we conservatives should sit up and listen. All too often we do, in fact, tend to leave the activism to the theological liberals and tend to our own "orthodoxy."

There are however, increasing incursions into the realm of social activism on the part of the conservative churches. I expect, though, that the social agenda with which we are involved, such as the "pro-life" movement, would not meet with the approval of many of Mr. Berger's friends. This is not the point, however.

To state that Jesus only spoke the words "born again" to one individual and therefore did not intend for us to understand that He (Jesus) is the only way to salvation is to totally corrupt the body of literature known as the Gospels. No competent critic would judge the body of an artist's or philosopher's work on the basis of one statement.

Much less would that critic be likely to construct arguments for silence on the basis of this one statement. If we honestly search the entirety of the Scriptures for an idea as to what Jesus intended to teach, we must also find such, perhaps embarrassing, statements as "I am the way, the truth and the life," to which Jesus also added, "no one comes to the Father except through me" (John 14:6).

Jesus also taught that "my Father's will is that everyone who looks to the Son and believes in Him shall have eternal life, and I will raise Him up at the last day" (John 6:40).

This very same Gospel which Mr. Berger quotes also yields up this quote by its human author, John: " . . . these are written that you may believe that Jesus is the Christ, the Son of God, and that by believing you may have life in his name." Jesus and His disciples did, in fact, teach that He is the necessary ingredient for salvation of sinners.

Mr. Berger has made an important point. Legalism is not the way of salvation. In fact no one will work his/her way to heaven, be it by legalism or by social activism. The Christian community must work toward what Francis Schaeffer called "substantial healing" in our social sphere. But we may not do so with a truncated Gospel which forgets the teaching of Jesus that we must "repent and believe the good news."

A few words about 'the Greatest Irishman'

To the Editor:

I was amazed to read the editor's, "The Greatest Irishman That Ever Lived," in the April 9-10 Mariner because I always find British political propaganda in countrified areas surprising, although I shouldn't because the Brits have been skilled for centuries at this sort of thing.

When one considers what 300 years of slavery caused in incredible human suffering and severe loss to the welfare of America, contemplate for a moment what 800 years of bondage did to the Irish by England.

In 1171 Henry II, a Norman king of England declared himself lord of Ireland at Waterford. In 1606 over 100 Celtic leaders of Ulster, known as "the Wild Geese," left Ireland forever and the English colonized their confiscated lands, the richest argicultural lands in Ireland, primarily with Scottish settlers.

This is the main problem in Ireland today, one England created and from which she would dearly like to extricate herself. With the help of the Irish that day will come to pass.

By the way the "Black and Tans" were not only returned veterans of World War I, but also recidivists released from English prisons if they agreed to serve in the British army in Ireland.

I have personally known people who lived in Ireland in this century who had "Black and Tans" machine gun the streets of their village for sport, killing anything that moved.

And DeValera refused to take an oath of allegiance to the king of England? Why, tut, tut. To think DeValera went on to be honored by his people and the world for years, to Mittell's anguish. Sort of life Begin and Sadat, admitted terrorists, receiving the Nobel Peace Prize.

As to Boston's American politicians of Irish extraction having the effrontery to suggest an all Ireland referendum with the majority deciding the question of Irish sovereignty, isn't that how voting is supposed to work? I mean to say, in a democracy doesn't the majority win, or should that be the case only in the United States and England, but not in Ireland?

If it upsets the Brits we just can't have that, or can we? Could a large part of the problem in Northern Ireland be that people don't even know they're Irish and actually believe they are English after they and their ancestors have lived in Ireland nearly 400 years? Who's narrow and blind here? Who really propagates cant and ignorance?

My ancestors were from Cork, Dublin and Edinburgh. As you may know, Cork was the center of anti-British antipathy.

Prevent tobacco sales products to minors

To the Editor:

The Sandwich Students Against Smoking is an organization of junior high school students who began a campaign to prevent the sale of tobacco products to minors throughout the Commonwealth of Massachusetts in November 1984.

Our organization spent many hours lobbying for support of this bill that prohibits the sale of tobacco products to anyone under the age of eighteen and also increases the fine to merchants who violate this law.

Oct. 10, 1985, Governor Michael Dukakis signed House Bill 6168 into law and our initial attempt to prevent minors from using tobacco products was successful.

The illegal sale of tobacco products to minors is continuing throughout the Commonwealth and obviously some merchants do not feel obligated to protect the children of our state from the addictive powers of nicotine.

House Bill 6168 (Chapter 270 Sec. 6 & 7) was passed by our state legislators in an attempt to remove the availability of tobacco products from minors. It was not intended to stop minors from smoking, snuffing or chewing tobacco; it was intended to stop adults from selling tobacco products to them.

If merchants would become more responsible adults and abide by the laws of the Commonwealth, there would be a dramatic decrease in the availability of tobacco products for use by minors. Given a choice to smoke or not to smoke, minors lack the necessary experience to make a mature and educated decision. But an adult, who sells tobacco products to a minor, has made a mature and educated decision to break the law!

Our group is presently working with our state representatives on a new bill to prohibit the use of tobacco products by students in all primary and secondary schools throughout the Commonwealth. This bill would address the issue of student smoking and would provide educators the opportunity to work with merchants in restricting the use of tobacco by minors. We feel that our work to stop children from using tobacco is necessary in light of all the proven health hazards associated with the use of these products. We hope that your readers will support our campaign by either contacting their state representative or by writing to us here at Sandwich Junior High School.

Yours in health,
Colleen Lynch

Republicans '86: A smear, a Swizzlestick & a fighting chance

As I have up to now understood political conventions they are rather as wedding nights are to the dating game: things are supposed to happen at conventions, things are presumed to happen at conventions, but surprisingly often nothing whatever happens at conventions. They turn into a predictable pap of interviews, puff pieces and recombinant self-importance on the part of both the participants and the press.

For that reason I had a hard time at first fathoming the recent Republican State Convention at the Worcester Centrum, for astonishingly, something happened: The Republicans dumped the preconvention gubernatorial front-runner Greg Hyatt and nominated one Royal Switzler of Wellesley Hills—or is it Wellesley Fells—we don't know that much about him yet.

This convention was headed toward the usual recombinant boredom until the Wednesday before the Saturday main event when Greg Hyatt's former employer called a press conference in which he announced that Mr. Hyatt had been fired after eight weeks on the job for inaction and imcompetence, and that incidentally Hyatt was in the habit of talking to dead telephones as well as "streaking" in front of a young secretary.

Hyatt denied the charges and called them a smear. But the state party as pitiful in its performance in the new Massachusetts as its namesake was in the old Mississippi jumped Hyatt's ship and drafted Switzler—Switzler the swizzle stick who stirs things up on Beacon Hill, whom the Democrats unfondly regard as the Norumbega Neanderthal. (Norumbega is the Indian name for the Wellesley area.) More on him in a moment.

Was Hyatt smeared? Was the former employer who denounced him a scum and scoundrel? Yes. Yes and yes. Hyatt is only 32, but his reputation will most likely carry the burden of his former associate's remarks at that press conference to the grave and beyond. Those remarks, with their titillating inuendo of instability and exhibitionism, are one of those events that, so very cruelly, enter directly into legend the moment they happen. When death finally stills Greg Hyatt's voice and breaks my typewriter and blinds the darting eye of you the reader, men will still recall this incident and cluck out loud.

But what if it's all true about Hyatt, every word? Was the press conference a "smear" in that case? Yes, it was still a smear because there are some things that never should be told about another human being simply because the telling is bound to damage a man's reputation out of all proportion to the significance of the tale.

Moreover, there are usually true distortions of perception on both sides when a person gets fired or resigns acrimoniously. Parties have a powerful need to justify their conduct both to their colleagues and to their conflicted consciences. Things therefore get said in the termination ritual that are half believed, half known to be false. The rhetoric associated with acrimonious termination sometimes contains truth, but is usually distorted, is always spoken in anger, and should never see the light of day where it can afflict a reputation forever.

What should be perfectly obvious is that whether the remarks about Hyatt were true or untrue, believed, half-believed, or unbelieved, there was much more going on here than we now know. Employers this side of Stalin's grave simply do not spontaneously call a press conference three days before a convention to gratuitously injure a former employee. Employers, normal employers that is, want nothing so much as to put an "acrimonious termination" into history and get on with business.

Therefore, either Greg Hyatt precipitated the employer's remarks with reckless comments of his own (of which I am unaware at this writing) or the employer was put up to it. The question then is, if put up, by whom? Was the Globe trashing yet another Dukakis challenger? I doubt it; the Herald was the original source of this story. Was it Hyatt's rivals within the surprisingly bitter, fractured Republican Party? That is what former Party Chairman Gordon Nelson and other Hyatt supporters fervently believe.

"But the state party as pitiful in its performance in the new Massachusetts as its namesake was in the Old Mississippi jumped Hyatt's ship and drafted Switzler — Switzler the swizzle stick who stirs things up on Beacon Hill, whom the Democrats unfondly regard as the Norumbega Neanderthal."

The answer to the question of who or what put Hyatt's former employer up to the smear may be the political story of 1986 . . . . your reporter will be digging for the answer. In the meantime there is an election on, and history will record that it was the Wednesday smear that made the Saturday convention interesting. Now, what of Switzler the swizzle stick who stirred the convention pot and came up the winner? What of the coming Primary fight, and what of the fight with Dukakis?

First, had Hyatt been a stronger candidate I don't believe the smear would have stuck. Hyatt was the preconvention frontrunner because the decent, colorless Guy Carbone aside, there were no other runners. No one believed Hyatt could defeat Dukakis, and therefore his support although widespread due to the fact that he had the gumption to run for governor, was shallow. There was little electricity on the part of his delegates; there was more the flavor of the dutiful resignation of a line of taxpayers on April 15.

As soon as the smear took place, the Republican legislative delegation, almost as one, went looking for a new face. After titillating former North Shore Congressman Paul Cronin (an impressive man) and taking a brief look at the ever available John Sears, they settled their affections on the Norumbega Neanderthal. It was probably as genuine a "draft" as you will ever see at a political convention.

In dumping Hyatt the convention probably placed expedience before honor. Sen. Edward Kirby of Whitman, who is one of the pillars of honor on Beacon Hill, stuck with Hyatt—he was one of the few legislators to do so. But in terms of challenging Dukakis, the convention made the correct decision. Switzler the swizzle stick will stir things up, will prick Dukakis' ballon and rain on his parade and remind him of his errors in a way that Hyatt would not as effectively have done with or without the smear.

Among the "right" people, I mean for instance the folks at Channel 2, the Globe, the Kennedy School, and the celebrants at John Kenneth Galbraith's annual Cambridge lawn party, Royal Switzler is considerd a leading who's who among Yahoos. Yet he is a fine speaker of the old school, an impassioned bellower who evokes the days when oratory throve without microphones. He will tweak every one of Dukakis' hairs, yet as I have listened to him his oratory comes across as more issue-oriented and less personally petulant than that of Hyatt and other Dukakis opponents who sometimes seem to honor the governor by their obsession with him.

Do I expect Switzler the swizzle stick to defeat Hyatt in the primary? Yes, unless the smear of Hyatt can conclusively be laid to Switzler's backers. Do I expect him to defeat Dukakis? No, but like a good swizzle stick he will stir things up, and the Massachusetts Republicans can only benefit when he does. Another polite moderate like Francis Hatch or John Sears would not serve the Republican need at this juncture.

If Royal Switzler the swizzle stick of Wellesley Hills or Fells, Royal Switzler the Neaderthal of Norumbega, the Democrat's who's who of Yahoos, can stir things up, anything can happen. For as I once heard a West German border guard call out to an East German border guard across the most intractable political divide in modern history, the Berlin Wall, "Nothing in history is forever!"

Not even the "Dukakis Coalition."

FROM THE KITCHEN

by JOAN PINKHAM

Read the recipe completely before beginning cooking

The only good thing about having a cold is that nobody wants you to come within 20 feet when you're sniffling and sneezing. So it was last week that about all I had for company was a good book and magazines such as Cuisine which offered these "rules of the road"—steps that are second nature to the experienced cook, but perhaps of some help in unraveling the mysteries of cooking for our new spring brides.

Cooking is a form of chemistry, and it is wise to read the recipe through before beginning, to make sure all the necessary ingredients are at hand, washed, pared, measured, at room temperature, or chilled as outlined in the recipe. Measure accurately, check to see if you have the correct pan size and make sure to set your timer. And if you're leaving the kitchen, take it with you. Follow the directions carefully and consult your cookbook for substitutions, if necessary.

Here is Pat Miles' recipe for an easy meal—just put it all together and when it's brown and bubbly, your family should be in for a treat.

JACKPOT CASSEROLE

2 T oil
1 lb. ground beef
1/4 c. chopped onion
1/2 c. uncooked macaroni
1 16-ox. can creamed corn
1 6-oz. can tomato paste
Sliced American cheese

Grease skillet with oil, cook beef and onion. drain off fat. At the same time, cook macaroni for 8 min., or until just tender. Combine all ingredients except cheese in greased, 1½ qt. casserole. Top with cheese. bake at 350 degrees for 20 min., or until cheese is browned.

An eye-catching lead read: "Garlic in the Wall Street Journal" and from the article we learn that garlic is "in," selling like mad and has become big business. The Journal says it's good for you as it contains allicin, which can be a powerful antibiotic.

Some studies suggest garlic may lower blood cholesterol levels. It enters the blood stream very rapidly and the article says: "Rub some fresh garlic on the soles of your feet and in a few minutes garlic will be noticeable on your breath." They also say that eating a sprig of parsley will dull the aroma of garlic on your breath—on the other hand, the smell of garlic may keep other victims of a spring cold at a distance and you may escape their germs. Speaking of garlic, how about this to go with the above casserole?

WALEECO CARAMEL COCONUT BROWNIES

3/4 c. all-purpose flour
1/2 tsp. baking powder
2 Waleeco Bars - no substitutes
1 ½ c. sugar
1/2 tsp. salt
2 eggs
1/4 c. shortening
1 tsp. vanilla
1/3 c. chopped nuts (optional)

Sift flour, baking powder and salt. Crush bars with a fork. Add bars and shortening to above mixture. Beat eggs until thick and add. Beat in sugar, one tablespoon at a time. Add vanilla and nuts. Bake in 8x8x1" greased pan at 350 for 30 min.

NOTE: I've lost the most important part of the recipe—Mary's last name—Please forgive!

THE DRAGON'S DUNGEON

By CLAIRE McDONOUGH

Forget Judge Wapner: Mother knows best

"I don't understand it," I moaned. "I've been rejected."

Skip looked startled. "The blood bank rejected you as a donor because you have high blood pressure. Why did the court system reject you as a juror? Because of your criminal tendencies?"

"Certainly not," I sniffed. "They only needed seven jurors and they called 24. They told us not to take it personally if we weren't selected."

And do you take it personally?" the Dragon asked.

"Of course I do," I hissed. "First they made a few humorous remarks about a mother of nine wanting to serve on the jury so she could have a rest. Then they picked other people."

"Maybe," Breida suggested, "you really wanted to be rejected. Subconsciously, I mean. And they picked up on the vibes you didn't know you were sending. After all, it's a pretty serious thing to decide the fate of another human being. Maybe you really didn't want the responsibility."

"Hah!" I reasoned. "Neither consciously nor subconsciously did I object to driving to Hingham instead of to Boston for a few days. And who, may I ask you, is more qualified to decide the fate of another human being than a mother of nine?"

"I don't care to gloat but just cast your mind back a few years. Who solved the great "Twinkie" scam? And with, I might add, the utmost ease?

"Remember? Someone had eaten all the Twinkies during the night and had replaced the empty box in the cabinet? So when Mrs. Sparrell stopped by and I offered her a Twinkie, there weren't any?"

"Did I, even for a minute, fall for Jay's suggestion that the Gosses or some of our other neighbors had broken into the house during the night and consumed the confectionaries?"

"Did I give any credence to Eileen's theory that Ralph Nardar and Adele Davis had combined forces to save the South Shore from junk food and had sent a hit squad to destory everybody's Twinkies?"

"Did I for one minute buy Mary Claire's hypothesis that the chemical additives in the Twinkies reacted on one another causing the entire mass to self-destruct?"

"No. With the inductive reasoning and detective skill that mothers have possessed since the beginning of time, I observed minute—well, substantial, actually—amounts of peanut butter on the counter. 'Who,' I mused, 'is partial to peanut butter and Twinkie sandwiches?' "

"Next I checked the level in the milk carton. Down considerably. This bit of circumstantial evidence pointed to the same individual."

"I next asked who, among the residents of the household, was home last night. More circumstantial evidence."

"The evidence continued to mount. Asking myself the question that all Agatha Christie's detectives used when solving a crime, I considered, 'Who benefits?' "

"I recalled that Kevin not only had come within inches of making the "Guiness Book of World Records" for the 'greatest number of peanut butter and Twinkie sandwiches consumed within a 24 hour period,' he also was noted for washing the delicacy down with enormous quaffs of milk. In addition, he had been denied dessert the evening before because he spit in his sister's cocoa. Another clue. He had also been at home."

"In light of the mounting circumstantial evidence, I examined Kevin's bed. There were Twinkie wrappers under it, and there were Twinkie crumbs in it. Faced with these facts, the culprit confessed, thus saving the reputations of the Gosses, Ralph Nadar and Adele Davis."

I smiled smugly. "I used the same technique in solving the Great M&M Caper, the Case of the Missing Girl Scout Cookies, the Gerbel That Suddenly Appeared in the Closet, and countless other spellbinding mysteries."

Brieda frowned. "Frankly, I think Miss Marple, or Hercule Poirot, or even Mrs. Fletcher would have come up with something more, um, exciting."

I shrugged. "The same system works at all levels. The booklet they gave to all us prospective jurors said we should be 'Seekers after Truth.' Have you ever met anyone who is a better 'Seeker after Truth' than a mother of nine? Maybe all juries should be made up of mothers. Who else is as skilled at cutting through extraneous material and excuses and getting to the facts?"

Patrick shuddered. "Look," he said, "I'm all for law and order, but cruel and unusual is something else. A jury of all mothers? It just wouldn't be sporting."

Sawchuk scales down plan for elderly housing

By Jane Lane
Mariner Staff

Local developer Wayne Sawchuk has revised his plans to construct elderly, low and moderate income housing on North Main Street. The new plan will include a total of eight to ten units, far less than the original plan for 36 units.

In addition to this scaled-down plan, Sawchuk intends to leave about eight acres of undeveloped land behind 330 N. Main St.

The eight to ten units will be for elderly residents, Sawchuk explained this week. The plan will include four Cape-style duplexes and two units within the existing structure at 330 N. Main Street.

Sawchuck expects the ten units will rent for about $700-$900 per month. The housing units will resemble single-family homes with a one-car garage and space between the duplexes. Each building will be separate, he said, and include four one-bedroom units and four two-bedroom units. Although the facade will be Cape Cod style, the interior will be one floor and storage space in a partial cellar.

Sawchuk said there were several reasons he decided to change the original 36-unit plan.

"I do not want to file for a comprehensive permit and force this project down the town's throat," he said. "Two things were a problem - the application fee requirement in the state TELLER program. I would have to pay roughly $20,000 in fees and the grant money is now in question. And secondly, I had a lot of opposition.

"But the biggest reason is the current bond market regarding tax exempt bonds. With the current legislative debate, there is a question whether the government will allow bonds for private construction projects only partially set aside for low and moderate income."

In his original plan, Sawchuk was seeking subsidy from the state through a new TELLER program. But with current conventional interest rates down, Sawchuk claimed the subsidy program "doesn't make sense."

"The size of the previous project did not warrant the expenses of legal counsel, engineering and building the units at union scale. So many strings are attached to the federal and state programs," he said.

The 36-unit plan is being "put on hold," the developer said, in reaction to the "potential opposition" from abutters and residents.

The new, revised plan will be "strictly for the

The wooden laminated keel was given to the Society from the family of the late Arthur Nilsson, a former member of the Society's Board of Directors.

Conditional okay granted landfill

The board of health granted Cohasset Heights Ltd. a reprieve.

Although board members appeared ready to suspend the operations of the commercial landfill, a brief recess provided time to discuss a decision with special town counsel Michael Leon.

Based on his advice, the board voted 2-1 to give CHL another 75 days to install and implement a well-monitoring system. If after that amount of time the system and data is not provided to the board, the landfill operation will be suspended. If the wells are not in place by that time, the site assignment for the Crocker Land landfill will be revoked.

The board met to make a determination Monday night. After reviewing an amended list of conditions for the site assignment drafted by Atty. Leon, the board listened to comments from town officials, CHL representatives and the public.

After the discussions, board members Michael Burns and Sharon Becker appeared ready to suspend the landfill's site assignment until monitoring wells were installed and data was received from the system.

Preventing drug and alcohol abuse

There are two new programs on the horizon. One is intended for an adolescent audience, the other for a more mature participant.

But both programs, sponsored by the Social Service League of Cohasset, focus on the prevention of drug and alcohol abuse in our community.

The two separate programs are "follow-ups" to the League's successful drug seminar sessions held last fall. Based on the outstanding attendance at the seminars, and the request for additional discussion programs, the League responded with two innovative projects.

The first program will be held Tuesday, May 13 at Cohasset High School. The in-school presentation will take place at a morning assembly for grades 7-10.

Health education director Michael Gill explained, "this really is a preventative program, which is what we were looking for. We decided on these grade levels because it coincides with our philosophy of prevention - before these kids reach the age when unhealthy attitudes about drugs and alcohol set in."

Gill is enthusiastic about this latest project in conjunction with the Social Service League. The health educator gave all the credit to the League and member Helen Hooper for finding the best possible program.

"I think this particular program will be a unique opportunity for our students," he said. "None of the special programs we offer each year are an answer in themselves. But they work as a supplement to the school's on-going education programs.

"The Social Service League has been very interested and very good about working with me," Gill noted. "They are the ones who come up with the funding and the good ideas. I met with them after the fall seminars. Helen Hooper came up with this particular idea. She's fantastic. They really are concerned people."

The high school presentation is new to Cohasset. It's innovative and exciting, according to League member Hooper.

The program is called "The Improbable Players." Aptly-named, the entourage of actors present what they call "a provocative assembly program about drug and alcohol abuse."

The Improbable Players are four actors who "collaborate because of their common concerns about chemical dependency." Hooper explained the

A look at two community volunteers

By John Magadieu
Mariner Staff

Linda Farrag and Louise Smullen have something in common. They both like to see the glow of newly-acquired knowledge in a child's eyes.

Farrag and Smullen are scouting volunteers.

Farrag, of 78 South Main Street became a cub scout volunteer when her son, David joined scouting six years ago. Now, she's a den leader and David, now a boy scout, helps her out as a den chief.

Smullen, of 264A North Main Street used to be a cub scout den leader, until her daughter, Christine joined the girl scouts in 1960, then Smullen became a brownie leader.

"When David began cub scouting," Farrag recalled, "I was sort of inactive. I stayed on the sidelines and would only do something if I were asked.

"But by the time he was in his second or third year," she said, "I started getting more involved. I began writing a newsletter and planning meetings."

Farrag explained she "backed into" being a den leader this year when the dens were formed and a group of six boys was left without a leader.

"We usually start the meetings off with the pledge of allegiance to the flag and attendance." Afterwards, she said, activities range from lamp building to geography lessons.

"One day they all showed up with kites," she said, "so we went out on the town common and flew kites. One boy had a kite 50-feet long; he had to run pretty fast to get it up in the air."

With her busy schedule, Farrag probably feels a little up-in-the-air sometimes too. Aside from her den leader duties, she works nights at Quincy Hospital. She also volunteers at the community center and occasionally teaches CPR.

Smullen, a bank switchboard operator, is no stranger to work either.

She explained how she was "recruited" into girl

Telephone area code

Sen. William Golden thanked selectmen for their interest in his efforts to preserve the 617 area code for the South Shore.

At the present time, Sen. Golden said, he is researching alternate strategies. "Such measures may include expansion of the Department of Public Utilities regulatory authority, the initiation of proceedings before the Department of Public Utilities, or the commencement of litigation."

New Cohasset postmaster

James L. Hooley has been appointed Postmaster of Cohasset.

The Northeast Regional Management Selection Board nominated Hooley for this Postmastership, and the appointment was made by Northeast Regional Postmaster General John G. Mulligan in accordance with the merit selection procedures of the Postal Reorganization Act.

Hooley began his postal career in 1967 as a Clerk in Wellesley Hills and later worked in that capacity in Chestnut Hill. In 1977, he was promoted to Supervisor of Mails at the Boston General Mail Facility and subsequently worked assignments which included Supervisor of Mails and Delivery and later Superintendent in Brighton; Manager of Waban; as well as numerous managerial details of increasing responsibility at postal facilities in the Boston area.

Prior to his appointment as Postmaster, he was the manager of the Needham Post Office for the past four and one-half years.

Hooley succeeds former Postmaster Edward L. Fonseca, who is now the Postmaster of Marshfield.

Hooley and his wife Ellen are the parents of two children, James and Leah Marie.

Murray gets high marks

Rep. Mary Jeanette Murray (R-Cohasset) has been cited by the Foundation for Economic Research, a non-partisan economic research and study group, for her House voting record in favor of "a fiscally sound economic philosophy."

Murray was given a score of 90 points — the second highest score in the 160 member House — on a series of rollcalls selected by the Foundation.

"These rollcalls and rating reveal a general Legislative attitude towards legislation in areas that are vital concern to Massachusetts citizenry and, in particular, the business community — government regulations on business, government spending, and taxation," the Needham-based study group said.

Rep. Murray, a member of the Joint Legislative Committees of Counties, Local Affairs and Taxation, said she was "extremely pleased" at the Foundation rating. 'The private sector creates jobs not government," Rep. Murray said.

Dr. Burns opposed to approval

Dr. Burns said he was concerned an estimated 120 days would pass before the data was complied, which may indicate the leachate and groundwater is contaminated. "It's better to be safe and see if it is contaminated. If we have a problem, I don't want to wait for 120 days to find out." he said.

The time span of 120 days was a rough estimate provided by Camp, Dresser and McKee engineer Clarence Beatty as to the time wells could be implemented and data completed.

Board member Becker concurred at that point, saying the board needed more data from the site. She recommended the assignment be suspended until all monitoring systems are in place.

The original motion made by Dr. Burns, would have suspended operations for about 120 days until the groundwater and leachate system is in place. Once the data was evaluated by the board, it would have been up to them to rescind, amend or revoke the site assignment for CHL.

Atty. Anton Moehrke representing CHL, argued the immediate suspension of the operation might have serious consequences for CHL and the public safety of the town. He said the landfill operators were proceeding in good faith to rectify the leachate problem at the site.

The cost of transferring the contaminated leachate off-site is $3,000 each day, he said, but CHL has been doing this since April 18.

He also warned the board if the landfill was shutdown for four months, the leachate would no longer be transferred, but remain in the unused landfill.

He requested the board reconsider the original recommendation by Atty. Leon, not to suspend the assignment until the monitoring system is in place and data is prepared for evaluation. "At the present there is no harm to the public's health and safety from CHL. If there is no demonstrated harm or threat then all would benefit if we maintain a compliance schedule. But don't go overboard if you lack the information," he stated.

Atty. Moerhke suggested the estimated 304,000 remaining tons of refuse left at the landfill during a suspension would require a federal Superfund effort to eliminate.

After a brief recess, board members Becker and Michael Bliss discussed Dr. Burns' motion with special counsel Leon. After the meeting was reconvened, Dr. Bliss made a motion to require the submittal of a monitoring system proposal to the board within 15 days, and the results of the implementation of a groundwater monitoring system within 60 days.

If the system after 75 days indicates a potential threat to the groundwater, the site assignment for CHL is to be revoked.

"This does two things," Dr. Bliss noted, saying he too was concerned with the time lapse in obtaining monitoring results. "But the amount of materials (generated) in 75 days will not appreciably alter the amount of groundwater. If we hold them up until the monitoring system is in place, it will not significantly alter the contamination of groundwater. What is much more important, is if there is significant contamination of the groundwater, and that is a threat to the public safety, the site assignment is to be revoked."

Dr. Burns opposed the motion which was passed, 2-1.

Among the other conditions imposed upon the landfill site assignment are: a submission of plans for the location of scales and traffic controls; immediate installation of those scales and traffic controls at the landfill entrance; employment within one week of a part-time spotter who would check the type of waste being hauled to the site; use of monthly waste input forms detailing the source and type of waste deposited; submission within 30 days of a closure plan, and a post closure plan within 75 days which addresses several issues of concern to the health board; submission within 30 days a proposal for liability coverage; and 60 days later, a provision of liability; a proposal for a performance bond to be posted by the operators, and a bond provided 60 days later; weekly documentation that the material is properly reaching its off-site destinations and a provision stating the landfill will be suspended unless a leachate management plan is approved by the board of health and implemented by the landfill operators. The effective date of the conditions is set for May 1. Unless all conditions are met within the required timeframe or a violation occurs, the health board may automatically suspend the site assignment.

Atty. Moerhke in his presentation to the board Monday night, said the conditions were "at best, a tough kind of response." An immediate suspension of the operation, he said, would be "a Draconian kind of response that would have unintentional results."

Water commissioner Ron Goodwin said he was "disappointed" by the board's vote Monday night. "That fact that the site assignment permit is for 100 tons of materials, and not 300 (which CHL is now depositing daily) was not even addressed," he said. "It should have been clearly set out in the beginning."

Thursday meeting

The Board of Health Thursday discussed reconsidering elements of its previous decision to suspend

HOW TO REMEMBER WHAT YOU'VE SEEN

You've just spent the day looking for a new home, in a new neighborhood, and now it's all become one giant blur. Which house had the great dark room? Was it the same one with the awful kitchen? You saw so much that you can't remember anything! Many of us experienced this when we were new in the business and, subsequently, we developed little tricks to help us remember the thousands of properties we see each year which can help you too!

Carry a notebook with you when you're house hunting, and give each house its own page. On the top, note the address and price. Next, write down the exterior construction, style and color—"red brick colonial with blue shutters." Note the color of the living room carpet and walls and any other major feature that will jar your memory when you get home. Some people will nickname houses—"the white cat house" or "copper pots house"—anything to help you retain a mental picture of the property as well as those features you especially liked or disliked. This will help you to recap the day with the agent you're working with so you can give important feedback that will speed up the search for the perfect home!

If you're planning to buy or sell a home, calling HOME CENTER REALTY is a good first step. Our real estate professionals can service all your real estate needs. Call us at 749-8833, or stop by our offices at 57 Water St., Hingham.

MESSAGE FROM THE DIRECTOR

May has been designated "Older Americans Month". In 1965, The Federal Government passed a law known as the "Older Americans" Act, O.A.A., mandating the country to develop and provide a comprehensive social service system for older people living in the United States. The goal of this act was to help aid elderly people in maintaining their independance in their own community for as long as it was possible, and to improve the overall quality of life.

April of 1977, the Massachusetts Executive Office of Elder Affairs, became one of the nations first cabinet-level agencies responsible for accomplishing this goal.

On the local level, the Cohasset Council on Aging is the designated office to identify the needs of the senior community, and to develop programs that will help meet these needs. It is truly a grass-root element of the aging network, and a great part of the "Cycle of Services" to senior citizens. With your continued imput and support the Cohasset Council on Aging can make this "Cycle of Services" a big success.

Governor Michael S. Dukakis has proclaimed May as "Elder Independence: An American Dream". We can all be proud of the programs for elders in Massachusetts. With all of us working together, we can make "Elder Independence: An American Dream," a Massachusetts reality.

Conditions attached to landfill

the site assignment for Cohasset Heights Ltd., a private landfill off Route 3A.

The board voted April 10 to close the landfill until all leachate and contaminated ground water were removed from the site and until a monitoring program is implemented.

But Michael Leon, the board's attorney presented additional information Thursday, which he said the board ought to take into consideration before issuing its decision.

"Since the time of the board vote," he said, "Cohasset Heights Ltd. has been meeting with their engineering consultants to determine whether they could comply with the terms of the suspension."

"They gave their best effort to try to comply with the terms of the suspension," Leon said, "so that when suspension was to be imposed, they could get out from under it and continue to operate."

In a letter to the board, Anton Moehrke, the attorney for Cohasset Heights Ltd. said he believes the landfill has complied with the key element of the suspension.

Landfill owner Paul Barry explained 12,000 gallons of leachate and contaminated ground water are now being transported off-site daily to treatment plants in Bristol, Connecticut; Lawrence and Hull.

He said holding tanks at the landfill are not overflowing, which indicates that the collection procedure is picking up all of the liquid waste.

Barry added the process of leachate recirculation at the dump has also stopped.

In his letter, Moehrke told the board he will formally ask the board to reconsider its site assignment suspension, so Cohasset Heights Ltd. can work with the board's engineers, Camp Dresser and McKee, to work out the monitoring plan.

Leon told the board, "It is my recommendation the board take that request for reconsideration of that element very seriously.

"The reason," he explained, "is because to properly review and approve a monitoring program, the board has to allow its engineers to meet with the landfill's engineers to work out what we believe is an appropriate monitoring system. It's not something Cohasset Heights Ltd. can do on its own."

He added, "I certainly believe that if Cohasset Heights Ltd. were to continue to maintain this collection and off-site treatment system, they have complied with the true intent of the Board of Health."

He suggested the board modify its decision putting a time limit on the implementation of a monitoring system and making it an amendment to the site assignment, rather than a condition of suspension.

Board member Dr. John Burns commented, "We still have a hurdle here since the water wells are not in position to properly ascertain and evaluate possible contamination. We don't know in fact, that there is 100 percent collection."

Leon replied, "I think that's right; I think you don't know that, but I think that even if you put in the monitoring wells, the wells aren't going to change the condition. They're just going to tell you whether it's 10 percent, 20 percent or 30 percent of leachate that's getting into the ground water."

He pointed out as a result of more data, the board could further amend the site assignment to require something be done about it.

Burns indicated he would be willing to give the go ahead (Monday) for Camp Dresser and McKee to begin working with the landfill's engineers, "so they can get going on installing the monitoring wells."

Concerning the liquid waste removal, Barry told the board hauling it off-site is an interim situation.

"We weren't looking to duck anything like this," he said, "but we have been waiting. Last September, we did perk tests on the site looking to have an area for the treatment process."

He said he has been waiting for the board to authorize the location and for the Department of Environmental Quality Engineering (DEQE) to issue a discharge permit.

"All along the way, we've been told, 'It'll be comin', it'll be comin," he said. "We've been ready, willing, and able to put the plant down there and treat these chemicals and discharge the ground water properly. We thought all permits would be coming and we'd be able to do the job right."

Moehrke, according to Leon, gave notice the landfill's proposal will be changed.

"Cohasset Heights Ltd. is no longer going to request the DEQE reclassify the ground water," Leon explained. "The landfill is going to drop that and propose to treat it to Class One groundwater standards, which is drinking water quality."

Leon called this "a very significant change."

He added, "The board should be encouraged by these major concessions on the part of Cohasset Heights Ltd."

Results of survey: need for elderly housing

Here are the results of the Mariner's recent survey regarding plans by developer Wayne Sawchuk to build 36 units of elderly, low and moderate income housing on North Main Street.

The results were compiled by computer.

The developer was asked to respond to the results of the survey.

According to Sawchuk, "I think it's interesting to see that even the abutters recognize the need for additional elderly housing. I think that's number one - that it is more palatable, more welcome than low and moderate income housing. They recognized that need by a four-to-one margin.

"It also seems overwhelming from the people who responded and their comments, that drainage is a primary concern in the overall area, as well as water pressure and traffic. The overall comments against the project, and they are unified in their comments, is the concern that residents and neighbors have for any development in that area," he added.

"Low water pressure is an issue," Sawchuk continued. "But, if a project like a 36-unit development was to receive favorable action, then one of the benefits of the project would be the upgrading and improvement to the water system from the point where it is adequate to the project site. It is highly unlikely without any new development in town, we will see any upgrading of any substandard utilities."

Most persons who answered the survey included comments. Here is a sampling of those comments:

"When the contract run outs, low income housing becomes luxury housing in places like Cohasset. It's a way to build cheaply."

"There is too long a waiting period at 60 Elm for demands. I wouldn't be interested in buying - I'm seeking moderate rental."

"There is little or no employment for low-income families in Cohasset - no public transportation to Quincy and surrounding areas. Providing housing would produce problems for the recipients. If housing is provided for elderly, etc. it should be in downtown areas, close to churches, shops and schools."

"At this moment, I don't need other housing, but would like it to be available in a year or two."

"We should be saving land, trees, greenspace-this town is too overdeveloped as it is!"

"The Housing Authority should search for town-owned land and apply for funds to build low and moderate income housing for the elderly and handicapped."

"Elderly as well as moderate income housing are vital to the full service picture of a town. Should be located within walking distance of town services, stores, transportation, etc."

"There is such a need for housing, both rental and owned, that is both modest in cost and size. We must not force out our newly-weds, retirees or singles."

"Glastonbury Abbey built low and moderate income housing in Hingham at the old Central School. They (or some other church group) could do the same in Cohasset."

"There is a lot of other vacant land in Cohasset nearer to stores for shopping and a list should be compiled and published including town-owned land."

"Such development should not hurt neighborhood: eg. density, runoff, traffic, water supply. Planning board should exert leadership in locating suitable land."

"Strictly enforce zoning regulations. Do not issue variances. Do not change anything."

"If elderly housing is needed ok let's find another place. But there is no need for this town to stoo to a lower level with low income housing."

"The state has already answered questions 1 and 2 with a resounding 'yes.' Our housing authority has shown little direction to do more than watch over 60 Elm St. So the answer to question 3 must be 'yes.' The Gov't. Island properties could be sold at market value and the proceeds used to buy scattered site housing in a central location - near bus lines, stores and churches."

"Think of us elderly. We need housing real bad. Better than nursing homes. Please help us, we need housing."

"Why does Cohasset always knock down anything that helps the town and people? Other towns have more than one housing for the elderly. Help us!"

"Drainage problems should be a primary concern. The water and sewerage problems are definitive reasons to bar housing in the proposed development."

"No matter where this or any housing project is located there will be dissenters. The real question is need and I believe it exists."

"Cohasset does not have too many locations because of terrain. The state should not mandate to us. What happened to home rule?"

Marks enjoying welcomed retirement

He was a fixture at town hall for almost 40 years before his retirement in 1984. Charles Marks municipal career began and ended in the same office on the second floor of town hall.

After suffering a heart attack in 1983, Marks decided to leave the pressures of municipal business and retire to Weymouth. That's where he has lived with his wife Patricia since 1974.

But in his heart and in his mind, Marks will always be a native son of Cohasset. His affections, friends, relatives, and even his legal address remain in his hometown.

His mother and father,Marks said, traveledacross the ocean from Portugal with three small children and settled in Cohasset. With the addition of nine more children, the Marks remained in the community. Two sisters and his brother still live in town, and Marks is a frequent visitor.

"In fact," he said, "my wife and I have been looking for a home in Cohasset. But right now it's pretty hard to find anything we can afford."

The former town official votes in every Cohasset election and follows the issues affecting his native town. "I read about everything to do with Cohasset," he said this week. "I follow what's happening with the sewers and with the elections."

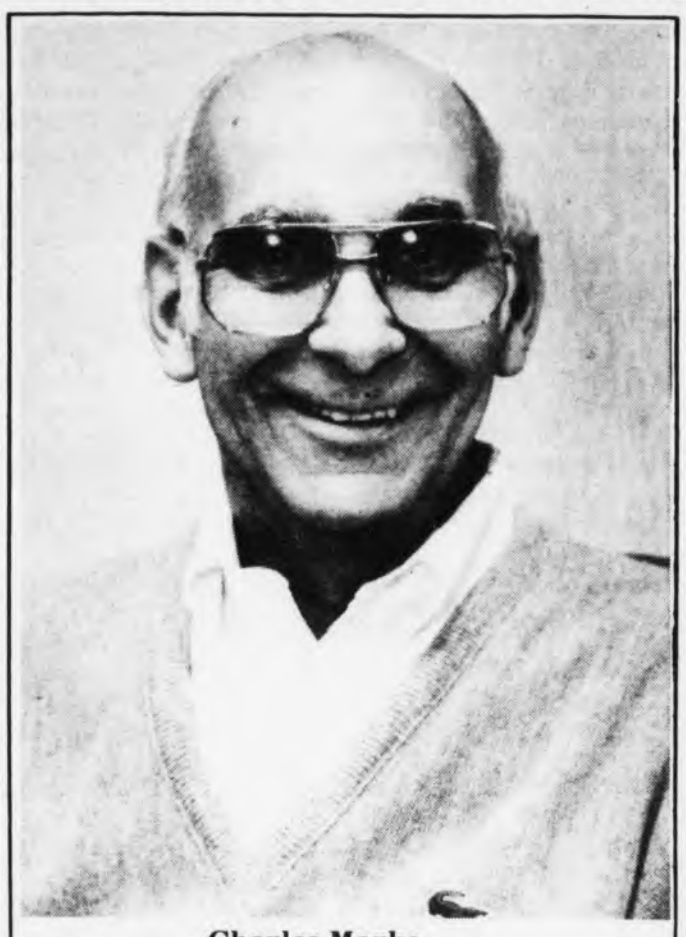
Marks commented that three years ago he was opposed to the formation of a five-member board of selectmen - a decision he still thinks was not in the best interest of town government.

"That was a big mistake," he said. "I thought it worked very well with three members. Five is just too many people."

The former town clerk added, "I think if the issue came up again, it would be defeated."

Marks, whose health stabilized since his heart ailment three years ago, regularly visits friends and family members in Cohasset. His two sisters are Mary Brennock and Margaret Hernan and his brother is David Marks. His sister-in-law is Frances Marks, the current town clerk. Mrs. Marks served as assistant town clerk along side her brother-in-law for about 12 years.

Marks began his career as assistant town clerk under William H. Morris. He began his duties at town hall in 1946 and when Mr. Morris died in 1956, he was named town clerk. Marks was elected to that post in 1957 and 1960. His third victory allowed Marks to accept tenure in the post. That is a provision of the state legislature which grants tenure to a clerk who has served for six consecutive years. "It's the intracacies of the office. After five years, they feel the clerk knows how the job is handled and should be given the opportunity for tenure," he explained.



Charles Marks

"I loved being the town clerk in Cohasset," Marks commented. I loved the work and the town. It was a good place where I was involved with everyone."

Marks was born at 35 Oak Street and later moved to 46 Stockbridge Road.

During his retirement from public office, Marks has developed a blossoming vegetable garden. A greenhouse, a gift from his children at his retirement, serves him well now. "I raise my plants in the greenhouse and now we will have a wonderful summer garden." he said.

Marks also enjoys playing golf and traveling with his wife.

☐ Dave Lahive, son of Mr. and Mrs. David Lahive, had a real interesting program under Mary Jeannette Murray's tutelage this past year. During the summer and winter breaks, Rep. Murray has a college intern program in her legislative office at the State House in Boston. They learn the legislative process in an orientation program and attend legislative sessions and committee hearings. Dave was a dedicated volunteer intern several times with Mary Jeannette and certainly learned a lot about how the state house and our state Rep. operate! He wrote a paper for a credit course for the University of Maine, where he will graduate from this Spring. Wonder if this experience made him decide to consider the political scene?

☐ Be sure to check out the collection of photographs by the students at the High School, which is on display at the Paul Pratt Library (in the children's room). The students were asked to "use their cameras as a sketch book, to be very creative and to express their individual vision," by their teacher, Colleen Lucas. An interesting idea, and the results are worth the trip!

☐ Notre Dame Academy's "Evening of Stars" was reported to be a grand success, and they raised over $100,000 to build their outdoor athletic facility. The celebrity guest most talked about was John Kennedy, Jr., and how smashing he looked that evening . . .

☐ Four South Shore residents have been promoted by the Beacon Hospitality Group, a Boston-based management and development company. Cohasset's own Dennis S. Meikleham has been named vice president of development and we congratulate him.

☐ Pat and Maria Plante are hard at work again, organizing the Teacher's Association 15th annual Ride-A-Bike for Retarded Citizens Sunday, May 18 from 1 to 4 p.m. This is put together by the Mass. Teachers Association, with over $2 million being raised over the years. Registration forms are available at all of the Cohasset schools: Mr. Plante at the high school; Mr. Deakin at the Dear Hill school' and Mrs. Tweksbury at the Joseph Osgood school. Just get an application, have your sponsors pledge how much they will donate per mile, and off you go . . . contact Pat or Maria Plante for further information.

☐ Saw John Benbow last week, and he reports that life is grand in Milton, but that he sure misses all of the Cohassetites that he grew so fond of! A huge hello from them to you!

☐ Congratulations to Faith Bowker, teacher at the Joseph Osgood School, who recieved a Citation at the Plymouth County Education Association, Inc., Annual Awards Banquet recently. This was awarded to her for her outstanding service to children, the community and the teaching profession, and is made to those who have displayed high qualities of leadership important to the improvement of education. Anyone who knows her, knows what a dedicated hard-worker she is, and any of the first grade students that have her know how special she is!

☐ There's a "Coming Attraction" that should involve the whole town, so brush up on your French and pay attention . . . its hoped that the whole town will be involved in the coming of the Mayor of Souppes-Sur-Loing, our sister city. He and his family, along with two others, will be here on June 25, and the whole town is getting involved. A few of the highlights will be a Bastille Day, a reception at Kimball's-by-the-Sea, a clambake at the Sailing Club, etc. It promises to be a 12-day extravaganza, with all urged to participate. This will be the first exchange, but remember, anyone from here is welcome to go to Souppes-Sur-Loing and vice-versa. Be sure to put that 12-day period on your calendar, and help to make the Major and his "entorage" feel a part of our town. Everyone is working so hard to make it successful, it should be a grand time indeed!

☐ Here's to the newlyweds, Mr. and Mrs. Steve Sinopoli, and to their honeymoon in Hawaii! They will certainly appreciate the nice weather and sunshine after the week we had last week . . .

☐ Speaking of vacations, everyone in Cohasset must have been away last week, so there must be stories galore out there for all of us to hear about. Let us know how your vacation was!

A Peek at the Past

We had two diverse answers to the April 24th Peek at the Past. Charles Butnam, 88, of Cushing Road, said it was St. John's store on Highland Avenue (below Episcopal Church), in the late 1800's or early 1900's. Incidentally, Mr. Butnam corrected us that the previous Peek photo was taken at Stoney Beach, not Sandy Beach.

A.J. Antoine Jr. said last week's photo was of Brown's store and the old Beechwood Post Office. We were under the impression the Townline refreshment stand was at the Cohasset/Scituate junction on N. Main Street (note the direction sign far right).

Tightening the noose

Once again, Cohasset Heights Ltd. is in the news.

The landfill has been put on notice by the health board. They now have 75 days to comply. The threat of suspension or revocation hangs over the operation of the commercial landfill.

Yet that noose which has dangled over the landfill for years has never been squeezed. It continues to hang there, a limp reminder that if things get messy, there'll be price to pay.

Now as far as we can understand, all the engineering studies the town has undertaken have never decisively proven that Cohasset Heights Ltd. is polluting our water supply. Despite certain town officials' fervent hope to the contrary, no where in the CDM study of the landfill, it is definitely stated Cohasset Heights is an immediate threat to the public's water supply and health.

Yet the water commission has insisted for more than a year now, the only recourse is to shutdown the operation. There is no alternative in the commission's mind.

While we disagree the landfill is an immediate threat to the town's water system, we understand the commission's stern stance. There should never have been a commercial landfill located in our watershed. To have a dump in which tires, glass, lumber, all types of commercial refuse is deposited within the confines of our watershed, is incomprehensible. But it exists and now we are trying to live with it.

And we understand the state's frantic search and need for commercial landfills of this type. They are a necessary part of our existance and the argument remains, they need to be located somewhere. So why not in Cohasset?

In Cohasset, yes. In our watershed, no. Landfills and water supplies do not mix.

Trying to co-exist with this landfill has been rough the past few years. And not without costs.

Residents of Cohasset paid for expensive engineering studies, an amendment to that study, and two special legal counsels assigned to town board investigating the operation, and providing defense in costly litigations.

What's the right alternative? Shut down the landfill that is a thriving, revenue-producing business for the town? Cohasset Heights pays the town about $30,000 each year in disposal permit fees. Should we close a landfill that, to our minds, has not been proven to effect our water supply? The litigation that would follow will be overwhelming to quantity and cost.

Should we try to live with the Crocker Lane business? Will this latest list of conditions imposed by the health board be sufficient?

We say, follow the health board's recommendations. They seem stringent, yet sensible. The operators have agreed to comply. Let's see if this is sufficient — to keep a private business in operation. But most of all, to keep the town keenly aware of the potential threat to its water system at a minimal cost to the taxpayers.

It's up to the landfill operators to ensure that the health and safety of the public is a primary concern. We feel the latest list of conditions will serve as a strong reminder — a noose that has been pulled just a bit tighter around the neck of the accused.

Mr. Di has experience as principal

Letters

To the Editor:

The outstanding letter published in the Cohasset Mariner, April 24, written by former Cohasset School Committee Chairman, Doris Golden, has prompted me, as a former Cohasset School Committee member to write concerning the selection of a new High School Principal.

The many citizens who moved to Cohasset in the last 13 years may not realize that Assistant Principal, Gino DiGirolamo was Principal of Cohasset High School for a year. The 1973 Town Report states:

REPORT TO THE SCHOOL COMMITTEE-1973

1973 was a busier and more complicated year for the School Committee than 1972; most members of the Committee didn't think that would be possible. Some of the more important events of 1973 will be reviewed in this brief report.

Superintendent James Gray continued his work to develop and maintain a first-rate learning program for the Cohasset schools. In this effort he and the School Committee encountered both support and resistance, resistance which at times reached a point where it disrupted the learning process. One such case occurred in early spring, when the School Committee reached a most difficult and controversial decision not to renew High School Principal Richard Streeter's contract. This decision was unpopular with many and unsettled the High School.

To fill the position of high school principal the School Committee interviewed many impressive candidates. After thorough review the Committee voted unanimously to appoint Mr. Gino DiGirolamo as Principal. The Committee felt that he was uniquely qualified because of his background (B.S. from Merrimac College and M.Ed. from Boston University), his teaching experience (four years as math teacher in New Britain, Connecticut; fourteen years as math teacher in Cohasset High School, seven of those years as department chairman and three as assistant principal), and his thorough knowledge of Cohasset High School's faculty and students.

Note that the former School Committee unanimously chose Gino DiGirolamo after interviewing "many impressive candidates." It is my feeling that many quiet unassuming people, who work the hardest at their jobs, are not fully appreciated, because they accomplish so much in a competent dedicated way.

In regard to Mr. Streeter, he resumed the principalship after successful legal appeal.

Is the School Committee looking for budget expertise? Again, as CHS principal, Mr. Di introduced something new. He not only closely examined all staff budget requests himself, but in addition asked the Communications Council (as the PSO was formerly called) for a parent liaison to work with him to discuss the proposed budget. That year, science teachers had budgeted an unusually large amount for glassware, and the parent selected happened to have a scientific background. Mr. Di requested the parent particularly check into this aspect of the budget.

The parent, after researching many lab manuals and scientific supply company catalogs was able to assure Mr. Di that due to soaring energy production costs, scientific glassware had just increased tremendously in price, and that the items were legitimate needs. This was also reported to the Communications Council. The only possible deletion the parent recommended was $12.50 for a rocket holder. Rockets, which had previously been considered interesting experiments had just been outlawed. That year the high school budget passes school committee and public scrutiny smoothly.

Is the School Committee looking for an administrator familiar with athletics?

Mr. Di was not only known for his football prowess in high school, but he has coached various CHS teams, and stepped into the breach when no coach could be found for a girls' team.

Is the School Committee looking for a disciplinarian?

Mr. Di is a former U.S. Marine Officer, who can be firm when necessary. However, he is also compassionate—a rare blend—which makes for a fair administrator.

Is the School Committee looking for curriculum changes?

Mr. Di introduced the "new math" when it became available, but was also the first to recognize and adjust for its shortcomings. True educational reform in an institution—and institutions are notoriously resistant to change—must come from within. However, I would characterize Mr. Di as a catalyst.

Is the School Committee looking to support teacher morale? Why not promote from within?

The first of my three years on the School Committee overlapped the last of Doris Golden's six years. I did not agree with Doris on several issues, but I respected her for her attention to communication. Doris personally saw that all School Committee members received copies of all written citizen complaints, and also discussed with us by telephone all verbal complaints. I really only understood by comparison how effective she was at communicating with other members which she considered to be an aspect of her responsibility, after she left the School Committee. In her letter to the Editor she questioned why search for a CHS Principal, when we already have a man so able. I echo her communication.

Sewer commissioners introduce red herring

To the Editor:

Under a headline "Wrong figures used in sewer plant cost", Mr. Edward Guild claims that figure of $3.3 million for Cohasset's share of the cost of Phase I of the Metcalf and Eddy plan is unrealistically low. The figures are taken from the very detailed and well done M&E report, which uses the proper levels of funding. M&E have engineered enough plants that they should be able to estimate costs accurately. It is often claimed by opponents that rock excavation for the collection system has been underestimated. Yet our sewer commission induced the voters at the June 1984 town meeting to sewer the same area as M&E Phase I, and the $1.1 million appropriation had to be based in part on the same cost estimate as M&E for installing the sewers — but improperly adjusted downward by inappropriate assumptions of funding (despite repeated warnings from the state). If there was some other basis for the $1.1 million the town was induced to appropriate, it had to be lower, not higher, than the M&E estimate for installing the collection system in the exact same area! But perhaps the sewer commission used estimates from other states for burying 2" sewers in non-rocky terrain — certainly they didn't use a higher estimate than M&E.

If corrected for the funding delusions, the cost to Cohasset of implementing the Ward Plan for that sewered area would be about $3.3 million, or about the same as M&E Phase I. If M&E underestimated the rock excavation cost, then the cost of the Ward plan also would be greater than $3.3 million. Of course, the sewer commission is trying to obscure its previous delusions by now reducing the sewered area to little more than the area already sewered! Granted, this may save the town some money relative to a better plan — but it's a pretty high price to pay per additional sewered residence.

The cost comparisons in the Ward Report have no credibility with me, not only because they use improper funding assumptions, but because they improperly add in the cost of the M&E Phases 2 and 3. Whether or not the town would ever decide to so expand the system, it is manifestly unfair to have compared Ward with anything but M&E Phase I, which has the same sewered area (as determined at the June 1984 town meeting).

Letters

Mr. Guild introduces a red herring with his comment on overriding Proposition 2½. Obviously a major undertaking such as expanding the sewage treatment system would not be paid for in one year. Cohasset's share would be funded by a bond issue and paid for over a period of 20 years or so.

The state has not reduced the funding for the collection system from 94 percent to 40 percent. It never was 94 percent, as the state repeatedly warned Cohasset.

Sure, the state may be willing to compromise and let Cohasset sewer only a small additional area, even though ridiculously non-cost-effective per residence sewered. At least the discharge violations from the treatment plant will be corrected. That we will have to do more in the near future at greater cost is Cohasset's penalty for shortsightedness and posturing and may not bring joy to DEQE, but neither does it win sympathy for our foolishness. That Hull will have us over a barrel, and may eventually cut us off, is Cohasset's problem of the future. So let's not be so thankful that a compromise has been reached with the state. If the state accedes to our foolish plan of 2 inch sewer lines as part of the bargain to keep us moving, isn't that a Pyrrhic victory? Who pays for the unending blockages, who suffers the inconvenience? Not the state, but Cohasset residences.

No doubt the meeting on May 15 will be well attended by die-hard supporters of whatever the sewer commission is foisting on us at the moment. But let us hope it is attended also by a few fed-up residents who will ask hard questions and demand substantive answers. Some questions are: What is the payment to Hull for a share in its plant? What is Cohasset's annual payment for its share of operating and maintenance costs? What fine print provision does Hull have to back out of the deal? How many additional homes will be sewered, and at what total cost? What is the average annual cost to Cohasset homeowners in the three classes — already sewered, newly sewered, and unsewered? What is going to be done about the failing systems in that part of town generally considered unsuitable for on-site systems because of population density and/or nature of terrain — e.g., the area voted to be sewered at Town Meeting, June 1984? There are numerous other questions, and others besides myself should be asking them.

Sewer hearing set for May 16

To the Editor:

For the past six months, the Sewer Commissioners have restricted their public statements concerning the Town's wastewater treatment and disposal plan ("The Ward Plan") because of ongoing negotiations between the State and the Town's engineers, Ward Engineering. These negotiations are continuing to advance and have reached a point at which the Commissioners believe it appropriate and important to report to the Town. Consequently, we shall sponsor a public meeting on Thursday, May 15th at 8:00 p.m. at Town Hall.

At this meeting, we shall discuss in detail the status of the plan which is being evolved with the State. In the meantime, however, I am summarizing below the present status:

On June 19, 1984, Town Meeting voted a comprehensive wastewater treatment and disposal plan for the entire town. The town voted to raise and appropriate the sum of $1,091,095 as its share of the cost of the Ward Plan. This contrasts with the projected town cost of $4,600,000 for the previous plan (Metcalf & Eddy) which would have served only a third of the town.

The town's appropriation of $1,091,095 for the Ward Plan was based on assumed favorable State and Federal funding. Some of this has been approved and some has not. To clarify the impact of the changed funding, the Ward Plan should be thought of as being broken down into three segments. These three segments are as follows:

Segment One — The conversion of the town's existing Elm Street wastewater plant to a pumping station and the connection of the town's sewer service area to the underutilized Hull wastewater treatment plant. This segment of the Ward Plan has rating category. The town will receive highest funding on this segment of the Ward Plan, a total of 90% from State and Federal sources.

Segment Two — This entails expansion of the present sewer service area to be achieved by the use of cost effective small diameter sewers. Under State and Federal law, these alternative collector sewers may receive 94% State and Federal funding. Unfortunately, while it appears that the State will accept the small diameter technology, they have refused to authorize the favorable Federal funding. The Sewer Commissioners have been pursuing this important point for over 18 months, including a final appeal to the EPA in Washington. This appeal was denied—not on the ground of technical acceptability or cost effectiveness—but on the ground that each state has the right to allocate its Federal funds. In the course of Cohasset's appeal, the EPA made the point that for Cohasset to have failed to pursue alternative technology as it has would have been contrary to the law and EPA regulations. We are gratified by this statement, but of course, are disappointed that we shall receive less favorable funding for the expansion of the sewer service area.

The net result of this denial is that the Sewer Commission will recommend a reduced sewer service area. The town's engineers and the State are presently evolving a sewer service area which will be acceptable to the town. In summary, however, because of the unfavorable funding decision for Segment Two, Cohasset will sewer a smaller area, probably at greater expense.

Segment Three — Under the Ward Plan, provision was made to fund approximately 325 on-site disposal systems in the remaining 70% of the town. The June 19,1984 Town Meeting vote assumed 94% funding for these systems as provided under EPA regulations. Unfortunately, the State refused to authorize favorable funding for the on-site systems.

This February, however, Governor Dukakis signed a bill which we believe is applicable to Segment Three of the Ward Plan. This bill provides funding for wastewater treatment projects which have been approved by the State, but are of such low priority that the probability of State and Federal funding is remote.

Segment Three of the Ward Plan, namely the repair and rehabilitation of on-site systems for the major portion of Cohasset, has been carried on the State's Extended Funding List for the last two fiscal years. Under the new bill, one of the primary requirements for funding is that a project should be carried on the State's Extended Funding List. We, therefore, expect that we shall receive 70% State funding for a substantial portion of the on-site repairs incorporated in Segment Three of the Ward Plan. This is presently under discussion with the State.

We hope that the above will bring the residents up to date and we look forward to giving the town a current report on Thursday evening, May 15th at Town Hall.

"Who never showed up without a jar of peanut butter or some other gift."

Others I've talked with are going to miss the time you made for them...
"Larry always had time to hear a problem and perk you up."

I'm going to miss your artist's perspective the one-man campaign you made yearly to keep Sandy Beach clean...even if you were sometimes the only worker who showed up.
How many times did you personally pay to have the litter carted away?

You had an artist's need to keep things orderly...
as if Cohasset were a canvas which you could control with your bright paints.

Throughout your life you had an adventure of ideas.
These were nourishing distractions and you welcomed as many as you could find.

Indeed, you accumulated some hundreds of dozens of sea and building landscapes in your memory collection.

Connie Parker remembers your one-man campaign to forge the Village and Harbor Association, the predecessor of the Cohasset Chamber of Commerce.
...the volunteer group you formed to paint the Gown Museum
"But we hired painters to do the tip-top part."

At Christmas you gave your friends memberships in the Cohasset Historical Society... and now you are part of that history...and this is appropriate.

I asked my son today what important thing he had learned on his trip abroad:
"I learned that money in the bank means nothing, that it's much better to spend it on friends and doing things."
I thought of you.

I have now been part of Cohasset for so long I remember where Cookworks and Pop and Larry used to be...
Joanne Rossi went in one day, bought something and left the money and a note which said
"If this is not enough, call me.
They never did so I suppose it was enough."

Like Jo-Ann, you left enough.
I will miss your outrageous laughter and your belief that
"It can be Christmas all the time."

Sometime between 1844 and 1916
Arabella Smith wrote these words:
"Oh, friends! I pray to-night,
Keep not your roses for my dead, cold brow
The way is lonely, let me feel them now."

There are times when the artist is far greater and more creative than his material.
I hope this is not that time.

I hope we were enough for you.

Sawchuk revises housing plans

elderly," he noted. "There is a definite need for some market rate construction as elderly housing in this town."

Sawchuk emphasized he will meet with each individual town board to introduce his revised project. He also intends to meet with interested and concerned neighbors and residents about his new proposal.

"Our procedure now will be, this time around, to meet with each of the boards and the neighbors and go over their concerns and prepare revised plans which will follow the cluster zoning bylaw as closely as possible," he stated. "This plan may require some variances because the beginning portion of the land is in district A, which does not allow cluster zoning."

Sawchuk explained "in light of the changes in the TELLER program from the time I started this, and the change in the bond market, coupled with the serious concerns about the original proposal at this site, I decided to scale down this development," he said this week.

His previous plans called for 36 units of elderly housing with seven units set aside specifically for low and moderate income families. Abutters and neighbors of the project complained that a project of this magnitude would adversely affect the drainage flow in the N. Main Street-Cedar Acres area. Residents of that neighborhood already experience drainage problems.

"There was potential opposition to that original plan," he continued. "So I decided to essentially totally revise the project and put in an application through the individual town boards for their review."

In its initial review by a town board, the original plan failed. The zoning board of appeals denied a variance for the multi-unit housing development. And although the housing authority initially favored the project, board members voiced concern after a recent meeting with abutters.

Under the TELLER program, Sawchuk would have been eligible to file for a comprehensive permit to the town's housing authority. Although town boards would be able to provide input, the comprehensive permit application would allow the project to proceed with state financing.

"I feel the new plan will be totally compatible with the neighborhood, and will not unduly affect the resources of the site. It will allow for the preservation of eighty percent of the site in its natural state," Sawchuk said. "It will remain as open space to be used for passive recreation."

The developer said he will include a restrictive covenant to protect that acreage as open space. The remaining development "will be similar to cluster zoning around an open space," he noted.

The existing single-family home at 330 N. Main Street is owned by Sawchuk. He plans to incorporate that into two units, with perhaps one rented by the project's caretaker.

The developer's current plans include construction of the project, and continuation as owner of the properties.

He noted in conversations with residents, and as indicated in the Mariner survey, there is a need for more elderly housing in Cohasset.

The land has already been perked "and it will support eight additional units," Sawchuk stated. The property has also been surveyed and definitive plot plans have been prepared.

The developer said he hopes to meet with the planning board to informally review the current plans within the next two weeks.

First Parish restoration

Its first coat of paint was applied in 1752 after its erection in 1747. The Declaration of Independence was read from its pulpit. The Town of Cohasset was formed within its walls.

When Hurricane Gloria damaged the scaffolding around its steeple, the steeple held up the scaffolding.

Now the First Parish Meeting House, Unitarian-Universalist of Cohasset, which has graced the Town Common for nearly 240 years, has a new coat of paint.

"The Meeting House remains a centerpiece of the Town Common and a place of meaning and enjoyment to many beyond the membership of the congregation," says the Reverend Edwin T. Atkinson, minister. "Its plain Puritan architecture reminds us of those who came to our shores in search of religious and political freedom."

"And the new coat of paint, the final touch in a major restoration of this historic building, must be paid for," said Bill Bell, co-chair of the Meeting House Campaign and Annual Canvass.

The $200,000 Campaign will begin on Sunday evening, May 4 with a Fellowship Dinner preceded by a social hour in Trueblood Hall.

Diana Kornet, co-chair, added, "Monies raised in the Capital Fund Drive will be used to repay the $120,000 loan taken to pay for the work to date. The remainder will be placed in a Reserve Fund which will be used exclusively for maintenance."

The 86-87 Canvass Annual Appeal will be held at the same time. The joint drives have been in the planning stages for at least a year, with a diligent committee composed of the following:

Honorary Chairmen, Arnold and Alice Weeks; Campaign Co-chairs, Bill Bell and Diana Kornet; Special Gifts, Jack Martin; General Gifts, Woody Chittick and Barbara Bliss; Communications, Anita Franks; Special Events, Millie Mitman; and other Planning Committee members Dick Wheeler, Ed Atkinson, Jack Martin, and Eric Kluz.

After completing the Membership portion of the Campaign, we will extend the appeal to include the Cohasset community and the general public beyond, said Kornet. Contributions may be made to the Meeting House Restoration Campaign and mailed to First Parish, Unitarian-Universalist, 23 N. Main St., Cohasset, MA 02025.

Second Congregational

Church School—Sunday, May 4, children should attend chapel for a special program and beginning plans for Children's Sunday.

Search Committee—The committee has developed a questionnaire which was to be mailed April 28 to every family in the church. The data from this survey will be used as a supplement to the information gathered at our dessert meeting on April 13. It will identify how each person feels—what one sees as the church's needs and what each person expects from the church, and what the church can expect from its members and friends. Please take a few minutes to fill it out—your response is extremely important to the pastoral search. We would like all questionnaires returned to the church by May 11.

Teams to visit—Beginning in May, teams of parishioners will begin monthly visits to new members. Each family new to the church will receive a visit from these parishioners who will listen, tell about the parish, and invite and welcome those who are new into our shared life in Christ.

Parishioners involved in this visiting ministry are: Bobbie Fowle, Pat Ralff, Dick and Sally Avery, Dawn Vivian, Willa Hood, Betty Madden, John Seavey, Gertrude Hooper, Sam Pease, Joan Bell, Betty May, and Billie Berents. There will be an additional training session, time to be announced, for any others who would like to join this visiting ministry.

Meeting for adult education—If interested in adult education from Bible Study groups to topics which relate faith to areas of family and work, an important meeting will take place Sunday, May 4, after the fellowship time following the 10 a.m. service.

Volunteers for carillon—This year will see guest carillonneurs from all over the world, plus the Olsen Naven Transportable Carillon from Norway. The recitals will be held at a new time, 6 p.m., not to confict with the Music Circus, and to encourage families to bring a picnic dinner to the common.

Volunteers will be needed to publicize and host these recitals. This will entail distributing posters and flyers, giving out programs and helping with traffic. Also, The Bread Shop has agreed to make special bell-shaped carillon cookies which can be sold.

It looks to be a fun summer. If interested, please contact Sally Warner.

Leave a message at the church office (383-1083).

Readers for Pentecost—Once again this Pentecost, May 18, there will be a lesson from Acts in many different languages. At Pentecost, the Spirit descended like tongues of fire on the disciples, whereupon they proclaimed the Good News in every language so that people of all nations understood.

If you read in a foreign language and would like to be part of the drama on this special day, contact the Rector.

Boys tennis team depth responsible for 6-1 start

By John Magadieu
Mariner Staff

In his first year as coach of the Cohasset High School boys tennis team, Ed Amaral is looking forward to a possible championship.

"So far, I've been awfully pleased," he said Monday. "The kids have done a nice job and they've worked really hard at it."

The Skippers are 6-1.

"The key to having a good tennis club is having depth all the way through," Amaral explained. "We're a good club."

He added, "They're a nice group of kids to work with. They've been very cooperative."

Cohasset is led by Rick Redick, first seed singles player.

"Chris Ryan has been at second singles and he has done an excellent job," the coach commented.

Fred Willshire has been solid as the third seed singles player.

"Those kids have been pretty stationary through most of the matches," Amaral said.

He also had some praise for his doubles duos.

"Steve Myers and Jason Marsac have played second doubles and moved up to first. Dereck Lacks and Dan Farwell also have done a nice job."

Amaral counted four more promising racketmen on his 1986 tennis squad. Greg Wallingford; Cliff Scott; Wayne Warren Young, and Frank Willshire.

"As far as the league goes," Amaral said, "it's very competetive. The caliber of tennis in the South Shore League is excellent.

"There are six strong teams in the league this year," he added, "so we have to play every day because there will be some very good teams that won't make it to the states."

But the coach isn't worried about his bunch.

"They're strong all the way around," he said, "and they've responded nicely in terms of the work ethic.

"They've been responsible kids and they've come out to play."

Perhaps what is most remarkable about the competitiveness of this year's Cohasset club, is the fact that most of them are sophomores.

Amaral indicated that he will be glad to have them around for a few more years.

"We're looking forward to some fun seasons."

Yess Scholarship Auction

A Larry Bird autographed basketball will be auctioned on WVBF-FM (105.7 FM) Thursday, May 22 from 6 to 9:30 a.m. on the Lauren and Wally Show.

Joining the show hosts will be Bob Ryan, Boston Globe sports columnist.

Proceeds of the auction will go to the Desiree A. Yess Scholarship Fund that awards two scholarships annually to two women scholar-basketball players at Massasoit Community College in Brockton.

Additional information may be obtained by calling Robert Pura at 588-9100 Ext. 145.

Basketball team honored

Mary Jeanette Murray and Senator William Golden recently participated in an award ceremony for the basketball team from Cohasset.

The team won the State Championship in the Third Division. Rep. Murray presented the champions with Official Citations from the Massachusetts House of Representatives. The high school students received a tour of the State House guided by the Doric Domes.

George Keverian, the Speaker of the House of Representatives introduced the team in the chamber. The majority of the legislators were present and gave the Cohasset Basketball Champions a standing ovation. Many of the Representatives came over to them personally and introduced themselves. Some of the Representatives had sons on the teams which Cohasset defeated. Coach Minelli recognized their sons names and even knew their playing numbers.

Toughness & talent provide playoffs hope

By John Magadieu
Mariner Staff

They are hanging by a thread, perhaps a strand of catgut. The Cohasset High School Girls tennis team has an outside shot, a very outside shot at going to the state tournament this year.

"Right now, we're 3-4," coach Susan Dalrymple said Monday. "To make the states you can only lose six. You have to have a record of 12-6.

"I feel we could be 5-2," she added, "but we had a lot of absences. A lot of girls went on vacations last week and our number one player, Kerry Kirkendall was ill."

Dalrymple explained, "we've played a lot of tough teams so far, but I think if we really get tough and pull it together, we could make it.

"Right now, I'm optimistic."

She added, "these girls are talented. They just need to pull it together."

Kirkendall is the team leader. She is followed by second seed Carolyn O'Brien, third seed Linda O'Loughlin and fourth seed Jennifer Chapman.

The crushing doubles couples are Kate Ryan and Dione Warwick, and Michelle Mascarer and Kate Murphy.

Dalrymple explained, this year is a rebuilding year for the Skippers.

"I only have three seniors," she said, "so for a lot of them, it's their first year playing in the top seven."

The coach lost five of her seven starters from last year's 15-3 squad to graduation. That team made it to the states quarterfinals.

"Except for two people, this is all their first year playing officially," Dalrymple said. "That makes a difference because they don't have the playing experience behind them."

She noted her teams' strengths and weaknesses.

"This team has good endurance and perseverance," she said. "They stick with it.

"Speed is there in a few players," she added, "but it's not there as a whole."

Dalrymple explained, this is a young team and it's hindered by its lack of experience.

She added, "My number one is only a sophomore."

The coach hinted she will be glad to have this team back next year after it has gained more experience on the court.

"We're regrouping this year," she said, "and we'll be back stronger next year."

Three person exhibit at the Art Center

Artists Janet Williamson, Don Lettis and Gil Coyle come together for a three-person exhibit at the South Shore Art Center, 103 Ripley Road during the month of May. The opening reception for these artists is Friday, May 2 from 6:30 to 8:30p.m.

On exhibit will be Gil Coyle's mixed interpretation of cows, Don Lettis' monoprints and etchings both abstract and non-objective, and Janet Williamson's abstracts of nature unexplained. The exhibit will continue through May 31.

Coyle who works with drawings, monotypes, mixed media and paints, has done a series on the theme of a cow. She has been commissioned by a farm in Maine to do a cow decoy for a person who likes to look at cows but not have the work of raising cows. The cow decoy, measuring 4' by 5' and very portable, will be placed in the fields to attract neighboring cows to come for a visit. Coyle has painted one side of the cow realistically and the other side more abstract.

Williamson describes her work as an "attempt through line and color to record the raw emotional response. It is a cooperation between mind and hand to present human interactions with other humans and with the events that surround them," she says of her work for this exhibit. Her work has been included in the Duxbury Winter Juried Show, the South Shore Art Center's Blue Ribbon exhibits, and Scituate Art Association Festival and the South Shore Summer Festival.

Don Lettis is the academic dean of the Massachusetts College of Art and a member of the Board of Directors of the South Shore Art Center serving as vice president for two years and acting president in 1972. He has been co-chairman of the Center's summer festival. The public is invited to view the exhibit Monday through Friday, noon to 4p.m. and Saturday, 10a.m. to 1p.m. For further information call the South Shore Art Center, 383-9548.

Music Theater's 'Kiss Me Kate' is quite a sight

By Debby Muise
Special to the Mariner

The Hingham Civic Music Theatre's production of Cole Porter's "Kiss Me Kate" was a visually spectacular event.

Costumes were dazzling, and the sets, designed by Scott Ketchum and built by the company were artistically professional and elaborate. Scene changes were quick and smooth, and were executed without a hitch because of the efforts of stage manager Donna Luther and her stage crew.

Professional vocal performances were delivered by Lucille Ann Walsh as Lilli/Kate, Richard Jensen as Fred Graham/Petruchio, and Doug Trudeau as Bill/Lucentio.

Talent and stage experience were also obvious in Brenda Chase as Lois/Bianca, Jennifer Gwinn as Hattie, and Norman Shaw as Harrison.

They all did well despite the notoriously poor school auditorium acoustics at Hingham High School. Projection from midstage required athletic ability, but most of the actors could be heard.

Gwinn and the chorus danced and sang a flashy version of "Another Opening, Another Show." The song and dance rendition of "Too Darn Hot" featuring Trudeau and Gwinn was sizzling.

Choreographer Joan Kenney performed miracles in designing routines which allowed everyone to participate at varying levels of proficiency, on such a small stage.

Some of the choreography seemed over ambitious for amateurs, but everyone on stage appeared enthusiastic.

However, the number of dances interjected in the street scene in Padua, in the church, and between scenes could have been cut down.

Richard Grimm shone, especially as Sr. Baptista in the Shakespearean scenes, and was primarily responsible for the clarity of the comic message.

The quartet of "Tom, Dick or Harry" played by Chase as Bianca, Trudeau as Lucentio, Andy Mahoney as Gremio, and John Taylor as Hortensio was one of the more polished and obviously rehearsed moments in the show.

The well-deserved stars of the evening were Bob Pietrzak and James "Bub" Berlenbach as the gangsters. I don't want to spoil the surprise, but their entrance at the wedding scene was so funny that the first few lines of dialogue were lost in the roars of the audience. Their "Brush up Your Shakespeare" was wonderful and may have been the most popular musical hit of the show.

The 24 piece orchestra conducted by Paul James D'Angelo competed against a rude audience. Many people evidently believed that every orchestral interlude was an opportunity for animated conversation, although the talkers had to shout to be heard. There were very good performances by the strings, pianist Donna Bachman, and percussionist Robert Doyle. However, the entire group was too loud and several players were consistently out of tune.

All Broadway scores include many orchestral interludes that are often cut in production especially for amateur groups. It seems that not a note was missing from this show and its consequent three hour length was excessive.

Both performers and audience were beginning to tire. The notable exceptional was Walsh who was consistent in her professional delivery through the entire show.

The performance by the HCMT was, on the whole, very professional and well worth seeing, especially the gangsters.

The acoustic difficulties presented by the school auditorium and the orchestra are typical of amateur productions and do not seriously detract from the overall production. Produced by Dave Lacatell, the play runs May 2 & 3 at 8 p.m. For ticket information call 545-1226 or 253-5042.

Former water commissioner Pratt dismisses Leon as special attorney

Former water commissioner Peter Pratt, one of several town officials named in a lawsuit initiated by Cohasset Heights Ltd., dismissed special counsel Michael Leon as his defense attorney.

Saying Leon's actions last week in recommending conditions for the continued operation of the commercial landfill are "improper", Pratt discharged Leon as his town-financed legal counsel in the lawsuit.

CHL filed a lawsuit against the board of health and the water commissioners, and their individual members two months ago, saying they violated the business' Constitutional rights by claiming CHL is polluting the town's water supply.

Furious that Atty. Leon recommended the conditional operation of the commercial landfill, Pratt said this week, "I no longer believe he is qualified to represent me. I firmly believe, as I re-read the Cohasset Heights report from engineers Camp, Dresser, and McKee, that the only course of action recommended thus far is improper and not protecting the public safety."

Pratt had been a water commissioner for three years until he decided not to seek re-election earlier this month.

"I fought with blood, sweat and tears to close this facility," he continued, "because that was the policy expressed by selectmen, the board of health and the water commission."

The former town official said the failure by special town counsel to recommend the facility's shutdown indicates "serious implications here."

In regard to that allegation, Pratt has also petitioned Norfolk County District Attorney William Delahunt to investigate "a potential violation of the environmental protection laws and the potential corrupt practices of officials and appointed legal counsel."

He stated, "as a private citizen, I must continue to say the shutdown of Cohasset Heights is a drop dead issue."

He said the conditions enumerated by Leon to the board of health last week and adopted this week, "are not anywhere near an effective guarantee that this will insulate the leachate from Lily Pond. I can't understand why Leon put forward this compromise plan.

"I will not accept Leon as my personal counsel," he added, noting that as a town official he has been assured the town will provide him legal counsel against the Cohasset Heights lawsuit.

His request for the change in representation must be forwarded to town counsel Richard Henderson who will make a recommendation for a new attorney to the board of selectmen.

Pratt added, "Everytime we seek to cooperate with the board of health and co-mingle issues, we lose. If this is the policy of the board of health (to allow the continued operation of the commercial landfill within the town's watershed), that is a very dangerous policy.

The former commissioner said he talked with many people before deciding on this brash course of action. "It had reached that level when the policy of the board of health turned 180 degrees in two weeks. I'm not alleging any wrong-doing, but there are hard questions to be answered. This is now the apparent policy of one town board, but do the water commissioners, selectmen and the advisory committee approve?" he asked.

Pratt said the only course of action favored by selectmen and the water commission is to "close the site and engage in clean-up. If we have to seize their assets and mortgage financing, we must have this site cleaned up."

Atty. Leon was retained as special counsel to the health board in the Cohasset Heights matter about a year ago. A previous special counsel, Charles 'Bud' Corkin, was released from his assignment on the recommendation of the water commissioners.

scout service.

"Dorothy Bates, a long-time school teacher, was in charge of scouting in Cohasset. Every mother who had a daughter, she would recruit for girl scouting.

"So as soon as my daughter, Christine was old enough, she asked me to be a brownie leader," Smullen recalled. "She told me there was nothing to it. But of course, I soon found out there was a lot to it."

Smullen smiled and said, "I'm glad she got me into it too, because I really enjoy it and I've been doing it ever since she started, in 1960."

She explained she tries to teach the girls values and independence.

"We try to do community service projects, although we don't seem to find too much to do in this town. The brownies take care of the nursing home and this year, we stuffed envelopes for the cancer drive.

"We also go camping," she said. "That's still a big thing with scouting."

Recently, they camped out at the Boston Museum of Science. "That was great," Smullen added. "The girls loved it."

She explained she likes to have the girls in on planning their scouting activities because the responsibility rewards them with feeling of independence.

She said her role is "to make sure everything goes according to plan.

"The primary reasons for scouting," she said, "are to teach a certain set of values to these girls and also, to have them grow up and be responsible citizens."

Her reward?

"I think it has kept me young," she said.

"After three years, you can really see the results of what they've been hearing. I really do enjoy it," she said. "It's a way of life."

League sponsors preventative program. . .

actors are all drug-dependent or alcoholic. Through this presentation, they perform a repertoire of vignettes that deal with parties, weekend drinking, peer pressure, drinking and driving, and family conflicts over substance abuse. Audience participation and discussion will be encouraged.

Gill contacted other high schools which previously sponsored the program. "Everyone thought this program was wonderful," he said.

Hooper said the idea originated from Michael Rosati, director of the Prevention Resource Center in Newton. He was a participant in the drug seminars sponsored by the League last fall. It was his intention to follow that successful forum with another program for the young teens of Cohasset.

The League was also encouraged by many of the teenagers who attended the fall seminars. "Many of the kids came to Family Service members and said to them, 'don't stop here.' They really felt we were caring about them. My feeling is that I'm quite enthusiastic."

The League's social worker, Carolyn Houseman, agreed it was important to provide a continuity of concern and caring that was shown to these same students last fall. This program, she explained, would concentrate on the younger teens. "We wanted to reach the younger kids now," she said. "We are essentially reaching the kids who will be going into the 11th grade next year."

The League's only participation in this program, she added, is their sponsorship and identification of of an appropriate program.

Houseman is quick to recall the enthusiasm generated by the directors of the fall seminar program. Rosati, she said, "still can't believe how successful that three-night program was. He is still talking about the degree of openness. The kids appeared so comfortable. There was almost too much material to deal with, but they were not reticent about bringing up their problems - adults and students."

A follow-up meeting was held soon after the conclusion of the drug and alcohol seminars. "There was a fear that after the series and its initial impact, there was no availability of follow-up services," Houseman added. "We talked about this with members of the school system, clergy, board members, alcohol counselors and representatives of the PSO. We all had a sense of not wanting to leave this alone. We talked about future programs - how to get the students involved."

From that discussion came a recommendation from Rosati to sponsor The Improbable Players. This program is intended for the young teens only.

"The 12 year-old attending this program is not really that young at all," Hooper observed. "I'm sure the problems of alcohol and drug abuse go far younger than that."

The League is sponsoring a second program in May. This is intended for adult audiences only, specifically the parents of all sixth grade students.

"This is really an innovative program," Hooper stated. "It will be a three-part workshop for the parents of current sixth graders. 'Focus on Prevention' will be an informal, limited participation/discussion for parents. We will meet in a private home in town, and we encourage husbands and wives to attend."

Pre-registration at the League's office is required. There is a $10 fee, per one parent or couple.

Bill Spinks, the executive director of the South Shore Council on Alcoholism, will be the workshop leader. Other professional panelists will include Kate Flaherty, associate director of the South Shore Council on Alcoholism, and Rosati.

The workshops will be held three consecutive Tuesdays, May 13, 20, and 27 from 7:30 to 9 p.m.

A general outline of the three sessions will include an exploration of attitudes and experiences; a focus on family communication, creative problem-solving and developing communication skills; and an introduction to experiences anticipated 'down the road.' Open discussion and rehearsing real life situations will be encouraged.

"There will be professional leaders, but they encourage discussion, sharing of experiences and examination of our values," Houseman noted. "It will be an opportunity to develop an awareness now as well as skills at a time of relative quiet in terms of a child's development."

The focus of the workshops, she noted, is preventative. To encourage dialogue and sharing of experiences, participation will be limited. Rosati and Spinks have been involved in this type of format, Houseman added, and are keenly interested in the preventative aspect of the program.

The social service nurse noted the concept of the parental workshop was her idea. As a mother of three adolescent boys, Houseman admitted "your child's life changes so dramatically. Their thoughts are much more private, their experiences are private. There is tremendous peer pressure, even with parents with an open relationship, you can expect to find that relationship strained.

"In my special case," she continued, "if I had done something different, maybe there may not have been so much of a crisis. It's difficult to believe the amount of disruption that will occur during the adolescent years. The very task of adolescence is challenging the things you have worked hard to develop."

For further information on the parental workshop sessions, call the Social Service League office, 383-0771/0821.

Abandoned Property Owners Search

State Treasurer Robert Q. Crane recently announced an intensified effort aimed at finding the rightful owners of lost and abandoned property.

Dubbed CLAIM (cash left abandoned in Massachusetts), the expanded statewide program represents another major effort by the treasury to locate owners of missing funds.

Under the state's Abandoned Property Law (M.G.L. Ch. 200A), bank accounts, insurance proceeds, payroll checks, uncashed gift certificates, utility deposits and the like that have gone untouched for at least five years are labeled "abandoned." All such accounts must be reported to the treasury, which then attempts to notify the rightful owners or legal heirs.

Presently, some $125 million in abandoned property has been reported to the treasury, Crane said.

The Treasury toll free number is 1-800-632-8027.

Landscaper Peter Cook beautifies the South Shore

(Peter Cook began his landscaping career in Cohasset as the gardener for the late Mr. and Mrs. William Cox. Ed.)

By Debby Muise
Special to the Mariner

It seems the biggest problem for Norwell's Peter Cook is that he has only 24 hours in a day. Peter is a landscape contractor whose indisputable success can be attributed to his personal involvement and obvious love of his work.

You may remember the Cook Family from a story run last year featuring his daughter, Leslie, who was born prematurely. Leslie's first birthday was last November and she is doing well. "No matter what kind of day I have," Peter said, "it's all worth it when I come home at night and see her smile. She's great!"

Peter owns and operates two companies known as "Landscaping and Irrigation by Peter Cook" and "Peter Cook and Associates". He has worked independently since 1980.

"Unlike most landscape contractors who have a (retail) place of business like a garden supply store, we don't. We're strictly landscape construction." Cook's company is usually subcontracted by landscape architects who are looking for a company to complete a major design. He tackles all sizes of jobs, from foundation plantings and landscaping for the private residential owner to large commercial contract.

"One thing I feel strongly about is that the client who has a big project in mind is better served by hiring a landscape architect to prepare a plan," Cook said. "Design/build companies in some cases are influenced to recommend using certain plants because they already have them in their inventory." A landscape architect has no predetermined idea based on something he has to sell, and can give an unbiased opinion.

Cook now leaves the hands-on work to his full time staff of seven including his general superintendent, Warren Dwyer. "I've known Warren since 1970, and he's been with me since the beginning of the company," Peter said. Cook's mother, Helen of Hull, works as his office manager. Barn storage for his supplies is in Weymouth where it all began six years ago. He has three children from a former marriage who live in Braintree; Richard, 15, Jeff, 13, and Carolyn, 12. "All of them may work with me in the summers, but Jeff is the one who shows a definite interest in the business," said Cook.

In October, 1985, Builder, the magazine of the National Association of Homebuilders, chose two designs as co-winners of its "Project of the Year Award" for almost 1,000 designs submited from all over the country. Cook's landscape contracting company was the only common subcontractor involved in both projects-an unusual achievement! The two projects were Spinnaker Island in Hull (pictured), and Church Court in Boston.

"We got involved as a part of the design team for Spinnaker Island and worked with the owners and architects," explained Cook. In this case, Cook's company was not referred by a landscape architect, but was directly involved in the design aspect. "There were a lot of considerations because of the exposed site and the climate there. In fact, we're still working on it."

Church Court, on the other hand, was designed by a landscape architect and Cook's company was selected to complete the plan. "There were problems because of the tightness of the site," said Cook. "They also had a courtyard constructed on top of an underground parking garage." Materials had to be weighed and brought in through doorways in wheelbarrows. Irrigation was also a problem, but the biggest challenge was a 30 foot dogwood tree brought from New Jersey. "That (the size) was fine except the only way to get the tree in was to block off Mass. Ave. and have a crane lift it in over the wall," he said.

Cook graduated from Hingham High School in 1966. "It will be 20 years ago this year. I can't believe it!" he said. "My first job in junior high and high school was as a caddy at the Cohasset Golf Club." He also worked on the estate of the late Mr. and Mrs. William Cox in Cohasset as a gardener. That was when he decided that he wanted to have a career working outdoors.

"After high school I went to the Stockbridge School of Agriculture at the University of Mass. in Amherst," he said. Peter graduated with a degree in landscape design and operations "I was in the process of transferring to Louisiana State when I got caught up in the draft," he explained. "So I spent two years in the army, one year in Vietnam as an infantry soldier with the 101st Airborne Division. I went from learning about trees to ducking behind them," said Cook.

He came back to the South Shore in January, 1970, and began work as a landscape designer and salesman at Old Colony Landscape in Weymouth. "By the time I left there in 1980, I had become head of the landscape design and sales department of a very large and aggressive commercial and residential landscaping company.

"When I left, I had absolutely nothing. It was late in the Fall so the prospects of doing some landscaping work to pay the bills weren't great," Cook said. "I borrowed a car from my future father-in-law, George (Dob) Mehl of Hingham, loaded it with shovels and fertilizer, and worked seven days a week."

That winter he and his wife, Lauren, from Scituate, set up business and arranged projects for the Spring. "Even though she has a career of her own as a flight attendant for Eastern Airlines, she helped me a great deal as a part time secretary, bookkeeper, and supportive reference." He did the planting for Curley Park in Faneuil Hall, and for Quincy Market. "Professional organizations helped me a lot with contracts, client referrals and credit, which was a big factor." he said. "I was a member of the Mass. Nurserymen's Association then. I'm president this year, in fact," remarked Cook. "I believe very strongly in the professional organizations in this industry."

Peter Cook

"One of the most rewarding aspects of starting up my own business was finding people who believed in me and my abilities. Any owner/operator business needs to have those unpaid salespeople out there in order to succeed. They went out of their way to sell me and my services. You can fill up the newspapers with all kinds of ads, but unless you have people like that, it's a tough road, especially in a service business," Cook remarked. He now makes a point of supporting other independent small business owners since he can appreciate the determination it takes to establish and run a business.

In addition to the presidency of the M.N.A., Cook spends a lot of his time in volunteer positions for other "green industry" organizations. He is the Nurserymen's representative on the State Beautification Board with Kitty Dukakis. In fact, on Tuesday, April 22, Cook spoke, along with Governor Michael Dukakis, at ceremonies at the Saltonstall Building in Boston to mark the opening of the State's "Adopt-a-Space" Program. Run by the Beautification Board, this program hopes to encourage independent contractors and public groups to improve blighted areas in their communities. Cook will set an example by donating plants and maintenance services to the Program. He is also vice-chairman of the Mass. Horticultural Congress which runs a professional trade show on the cape every year and reviews curriculum at the Stockbridge School to keep education abreast with the demands of the industry. "I feel that industry has given me a great opportunity and I want to be involved in the development of this business here. The people in the green industry are a great group who love plants and love what they do," he explained.

Politicus — by David A. Mittell, Jr.

The band struck up 'God save the queen'

Before the Republicans prudently but impudently turned their Worcester convention into an actual news event by nominating Royal Switzler for governor, your reporter was working up a Norma Nathan-like eyesore of a column revealing who was meeting in whose motel room with whom, and all that sort of thing. Those notes, alas, made the smoke alarm go off at the concession stand and had to be destroyed.

But since the Massachusetts Republicans, by dint of their electoral incompetence, don't make fools of themselves as often as the Massachusetts Democrats, they mustn't be allowed to escape from the agora and go on to defeat without my giving a thumbnail sketch of life on their convention floor. After all, if, as expected, the Dukakis crowd gets in again, the predominant political color until 1990 will be gray. The reporter must make hay while he may!

A Republican convention, with which this was my first collision, is different, there's no doubt about it, from a Democratic convention, with which I've had several at-fault accidents. I learned this immediately, for as I walked on the floor the band struck up "God Save the Queen"—I kid you not, I couldn't believe my ears.

Now, that was awfully nice of them—I expect the Democrats to play "Your Lyin' Eyes" when I visit their convention next month. But for a party desiring to elect a state official in this heavily Irish-American state for the first time since 1972, the tune picked to mark my entrance was an indication, I suggest, that the party's public relations could use some first aid. For starters they might try having Arnold Schwartz-negger-Shriver give all their top p.r. people the Heimlich Maneuver.

Musical taste aside, it is hard to put one's finger on exactly what it is that separates the Republican convention from the Democratic one; but there are a lot of little clues to be gleaned as one saunters and loiters among the Republican species. For instance . . .

The Yankees don't still control this party which doesn't still run the state, but one does still see conspicuous examples of total social self-assurance that seems to go hand-in-hand with an ancestral faith that little inconveniences, for instance the twentieth century, will in due course be remedied. One senses this confirmed inner-directedness in their dress. Whereas Democratic conventioneers' dresses and sideburns go up and down with the style of the day, an awful lot of Republicans obviously suit themselves.

Some delegations at this convention, therefore, looked more suited to a costume ball than a convention. There were men wearing weird suits topped by captains hats. There were women draped in furs and topped with flowered hats, who looked like a perfect Mrs. Thrushbottom in a Marx brothers' movie. There was a man wearing a pink wool suit covered from stem to stern and beyond with what he explained to me were representations of fishing tackle. One strongly doubts a normal fish would show interest, let alone a normal voter.

The attitude toward alcohol marks another revealing difference between our two great parties. Many Republican delegates sat in their seats (at Democratic conventions they never sit in their seats) listening to the oratory (Democrats don't do that either) drinking beer. This they did as openly and unselfconsciously and unobtrusively as if they were "tailgaiting" before a Harvard football game.

Democrats, by contrast, take their convention alcohol on the q.t. Democratic conventions (mind you, this is one I don't blame on Dukakis) tend to be three-day (or in the case of national conventions, five-day) drunks. Just this minute I can't remember whom the Democrats nominated for President in 1980, but I surely remember the 1980 cocktail party Tip O'Neill threw for conventioneers that started at midnight.

You get the drift. Surely the Democrats pay greater lip service to demon rum at their conventions than Republicans do, but never have I seen alcohol on a Democratic convention floor. What that means is that the Republicans are being honest and being themselves, which is charming and noteworthy. But it also means that the Democrats, however hypocritical they may in their behavior seem, acknowledge the importance of the business before them. That is one reason why they win elections and why, despite the Reagan revolution and threatened political realignment, they continue to be the stronger of the two parties.

Along the same line, there is less intensity to a Republican convention, even one such as this that was making major news, than there is to a Democratic convention. That is probably because at a Republican convention there are fewer pure political types in attendance, I mean those for whom a convention is the sort of psychic orgy that a Celtics-Lakers series is for the basketball fan.

With fewer pure politicos around there are fewer phonies. At Democratic conventions you keep running into creeps in blue suits who engage you in brief, intimate conversation, but all the while their eyes are probing elsewhere for other flesh to briefly press. You don't see that type at Republican conventions, although Andrew Card, that earnest boy of a few years back who went to work for the Reagan Administration, begins to have the look of a "pol."

If forced to interpret the contrasts here portrayed, I would say that since the Democratic Party is a more vibrant, productive institution at this juncture, it tends to draw delegates who are more motivated (I didn't say "better motivated") and more adept politically than those Republican conventions draw. Democratic delegates tend to be superior in intellect to the Democratic rank-and-file. But with the moribundity of the Republican Party in Massachusetts I suspect that, in general and with plenty of exceptions, the "best and the brightest" among Republicans don't participate in party politics and therefore were not even at the Worcester convention.

On the other hand, the absence of political professionalism was refreshing. These delegates, with their pink suits and flowered hats and openly imbibed bottles of beer were being themselves, and people being themselves are always nicer than a crowd on the make, which is what you run into at a Democratic convention. I'm not sure which crowd, if either, I'd prefer to have running the state. But I'll say this: If they impounded my typewriter and gave me the 18-to-20 years at Cedar Junction that I probably deserve, I'd prefer to do my time among real Republican weirdos than among on-the-make phony Democrats!

One final observation. I went to Worcester for this convention by train. Amtrak was the perfect way to go—I caught the 7:11 out of South Station Saturday morning and came back via the 6:35 Saturday evening. The train was clean, on time both ways, and fed me both my breakfast and supper.

Yet I was the only person (for I made a nuisance of myself inquiring of every Worcester passenger) who took the train to go to the convention. No delegate, no alternate, no other press person went by train. There were plenty of people on the train, mind you. There were students and families and vacationers and elderly couples . . . but no Republicans and no other press people.

Jean Kirkpatrick got to this convention by private helicopter and I got there by train, but how the rest of them got there is a mystery to me—and I'm certain of this: The Republicans will never make it in Massachusetts again, nor will the so-called "Reagan realignment" be lasting in America unless and until the Republicans get to know, to understand, and to represent the sort of American you meet on a train.

* * * *

Last week I mentioned Sen. Edward Kirby as a "pillar of honor" who kept his word to gubernatorial candidate Greg Hyatt despite a great deal of pressure from other Republican legislators to switch to Royal Switzler. In mentioning Kirby it was unfair to leave out other legislators who did not switch. The complete list: Kirby, Rep. Mary Jeannette Murray of Cohasset, Sen. John Parker of Taunton, and Rep. William Robinson of Melrose. Numerous other Republican legislators broke their word to Hyatt, but this gang of four voted as pledged.

Andrew Lloyd Weber wrote the music for the smash broadway musical "Cats."

" The South Shore Performing Arts Center will make an announcement shortly of their season to begin in the fall of 1986, with popular comedies and musicals.

A Stone's Throw — by Paul Steven Stone

Missing in action

The last time they saw him was on Saturday.

"He went out to start the spring yard chores," his wife explained. ". . . pulling up sod for the new garden."

"No," the son countered, "he took the ladder so he could clean leaves out of the gutters."

The daughter waved aside both notions.

"The ladder was for the storm windows."

"But he was going to do the windows after he fertilized the front lawn," the wife said. "or was it after he cleared out the overgrown brush?"

"The brush was tomorrow," the daughter said, "when he cut down the maple."

The detective interrupted to ask, "What did he look like?"

For a moment all was quiet. "Kind of like a gardener," one of the family said.

Later, the detective handed in his report.

"Here's another one," he told his chief.

"Missing?"

"Escaped."

Soccer tryouts kick-off 1986 Bay State Games

Massachusetts' reputation as a soccer powerhouse will be greatly evident as the 1986 Bay State Games regional qualifying season gets underway. The Bay State Games soccer committee is readying fields across the state in anticipation of nearly 2,500 players who are expected to turn out for the regional tryouts over the next six weeks.

Each of the Bay State Games six regions will choose a representative team in each of the following divisions: Boys Scholastic, Girls Scholastic, Men's Open and Women's Open. These teams will advance to the finals, July 11 to 13 in Boston. All athletes must be pre-registered to attend a regional qualifier. Entry booklets are available from all high school and college athletic directors and at every Bank of Boston location throughout the state. Entry forms must be received in the Bay State Games office prior to the date of a tryout.

The Coast area tryout will be: Boys — May 4 at Silver Lake H.S., Pembroke at 9 a.m.; and the girls tryout will be May 4 at Cape Cod College, Harwich, at 10 a.m.

"The quality of coaching in the Bay State Games is quite remarkable," said Rick Copland, State Soccer Chairman for the Bay State Games. "We have well-known college coaches, coaches who have organized reputable soccer clinics and camps around New England, as well as some international names. The players who come to a tryout, even if they don't make the finals team, will get a great all-around experience with these coaches on board."

For more information, call Bill Johnson (boys team) at 834-8877, or (girls team) Skip Culpepper at 447-0220.

The end of the school year is fast approaching and with that come thoughts of summer and the fourth annual Bay State Games, Massachusetts Olympic Sports Festival.

NEARLY NATIVE — by DARRELL BERGER

Living wills enhance our freedom

She was 71 years old and had cancer. She tried everything. Her hair fell out. She couldn't eat. She was in despair. She lived for years and died bit by bit.

His father is 90 years old. He has been in a nursing home six years. He is extremely confused and frail, which makes each day a freightening experience. He no longer recognizes his family nor recalls his past.

The above are fictitious. But, like all ministers, I have known many like them. Of course, not all terminal illnesses come to those of advanced age.

Ministers are called to relieve pain when we can and help endure it when we cannot. Eventually one confronts a sad, disquieting thought: sometimes death is preferable to life. The quality of life is not the same as the length of life.

In a society able to prolong the mechanics of life far beyond what we once could, the question of whether life must or should always be prolonged becomes increasingly difficult.

Questions once confined to ethics classes now confront us all. We are ill-prepared.

U.S. citizens affirm individual freedom, especially in matters of private morality. But, in medical care as in other forms of technology, scientific advances have exceeded moral development.

A Living Will is one attempt to close the gap. An extension of one's regular will, it adds an important clause, stating one's desire not to be kept alive by artificial means.

Clearly such an addition would have been meaningless even a few years ago. A Living Will spells out one's wishes for the circumstances of death just as a regular will spells out who gets the furniture. Since the decision to end a life is so heavy, a Living Will removes a tremendous burden from one's heirs.

However, Living Wills are not recognized by the Commonwealth of Massachusetts, though they are in several states. This means that you can be kept alive against your will, which some people conclude is a kind of damnation.

There is legislation pending, but it faces several obstacles from hospitals, insurance companies and churches. We have been taught "Thou Shalt not Kill," and many consider "Thou must be kept alive at any cost" to be a corollary.

But many do not, and it is time for the institutions devoted to maintaining life in the Commonwealth to admit that individuals of reason and good will can and do disagree. Therefore an absolute rule concerning how one must die or be kept alive is tyranny.

One realizes tremendous moral tension surrounding the issue. Conflicts exist not only between people, but within individuals.

How can I know what I would truly desire for myself or my loved ones? I can think of some situations where my course would be clear, others where it would not.

In a time of spiritual crisis, one needs to call on a variety of supports. A member of the clergy, or one's spiritual advisor, however one defines it, ought to be helpful. Experts from the law and medicine should also be consulted. But the state should stay out.

There will always be cases where the state will get involved. The number of mercy killings are increasing, and these must be tried.

Laws against mercy killing are also lagging behind technology. Is it murder to allow someone to die who wants to? What about someone who cannot communicate? How does one judge motives?

Even circumstances of Living Wills can be complex. Is a respirator "extraordinary means?" What about insulin to a diabetic? And some argue that "right to die" legislation opens the way to other abuses, like the government's using mercy killing for removing certain undesirable categories of people, a thoroughly repellant thought. When applied to birth deformities it gives us perhaps the most agonizing choices a person could confront.

In any case one ought not argue that mercy killing, or removing medical procedures is an easy way out. Matters of life and death are never easy, nor should they be made so. But they can be made more bearable when the state removes itself as an impediment.

The freedom to die with dignity, like all freedoms, is open to abuse. But the lack of freedom, with institutions making decisions that should be made by individuals, is a worse abuse.

(Darrell Berger is minister of the First Parish Unitarian Church of Scituate.)

☐ I wish I was as sure of anything as my friend X is of everything.

☐ Education is what you get from reading the small print. Experience is what you get from not reading it.

☐ "The difference between the right word and the almost right word is the difference between lightning and the lightning bug." Mark Twain said it.

☐ We don't want to step between Wellesley and Smith, but we get the idea that Wellesley girls are interested in pursuing learning, while Smith girls lean towards learning pursuing. Also, Wellesley girls have been called frustrated Smith applicants.

☐ There is no direct relationship between the quality of an educational program and its cost.

☐ During our recent trip to Brazil and the Amazon we sat at a table with a charming Canadian couple. They asked Bobbie and me why Americans have such a distorted picture of Canada, where "believe it or not, it is not always winter." Kenneth Boulding, whoever he is, had this to say about our northern neighbor: "Canada has no cultural unity, no linguistic unity, no religious unity, no economic unity, no geographic unity. All it has is unity."

☐ Answers to above quiz: 1) Day-active animals are called diurnal. 2) The 10 most frequently written words in English are: I, the, of, and, to, a, in, that, is, it.

FROM THE KITCHEN

by JOAN PINKHAM

Gourmet group greets newcomers with good food

When the curtains are up and the carpets down, sometime between then and when the last picture is in place, the Welcome Wagon hostess comes to call.

To the stranger in town the problem then becomes that of finding time to sit back and enjoy her new home. One of the nicest ways to meet new friends is through the Newcomers Club, where a variety of programs is offered.

The Gourmet Group is a very special way of sharing a common interest in good foods, getting to know a group you might otherwise never have met. The colonial dinner menu planned by the Marshfield Newcomers Club offered roast duck with fruit stuffing prepared by Nancy Leeman and Kay Roberts, cherry trifle made by Fran McDonald and Rosemary McCarthy, Indian corn muffins by Jeannie Backofen and Ms.Calvert, and this salad dressing made by Betty Polansky and Sharon O'Neil called

WILLIAMSBURG INN REGENCY SALAD DRESSING

1 T all-purpose flour
2 c. chicken stock
1 T onion, finely chopped
1 clove garlic
1/2 c. vegetable oil, divided
2 T French-style mustard
Salt and pepper to taste
1/2 c. vinegar
1 egg yolk, lightly beaten

Mix flour with 1/2 c. chicken stock. Bring remaining stock to boil and stir in flour mixture. Cook 5 minutes over medium heat, stirring constantly. Remove. Puree onion and garlic in 1/4 c. vegetable oil in blender. Transfer to mixing bowl. Add seasonings, vinegar and egg yolk. Mix. Add rest of oil very slowly, beating constantly. Add hot stock while continuing to beat. Cool to room temperature and refrigerate.

Hosting the two groups were Edward and Rowena Zink and Paul and Joanne Arseneau. Preparing the vegetables were Mary Doyle and Sally Russell. In addition to bourbon squash rings, this timely dish served four and is called

Co-chairing the Gourmet Group are Rowena Zink and Nancy Leeman, both of whom have moved a great deal and have come to appreciate the values offered by Newcomers Clubs along the way. Rowena says that even though her family has been in Marshfield more than seven years, they love making new friends and know how important it is to have someone to turn to when you're a stranger in town. This dessert prepared by Fran McDonald and Rosemary McCarthy was served with whipped cream and maraschino cherries as a topping for their

3 T brandy, divided
1 qt. fresh cherries, or 1 can (1 lb., 5 oz.) cherry pie filling, divided

THE DRAGON'S DUNGEON — By CLAIRE McDONOUGH

Watch out: She's designing a woman

"Rejoice," I told the Dragon. "I have really great news. My hour has come."

He looked startled. "It's finally happened, hasn't it? You've totally wigged out."

I gave him a superior smile. "Don't be ridiculous. You should be very happy for me. My style of housekeeping is in. I'm a trend setter.

"You've always wanted to impress Princess Di? This is your big chance. She's going to be lusting after an invitation to see how I've done our living room."

He nodded. " 'Done' is the right word. Are you trying to tell me that Princess Di wants to look at the political bumper stickers on the mantlepiece? Or maybe it's the dead plants in the window or the socks you've left on the end table for three months because you think some day you're going to darn them."

"Sort of, " I admitted. "Have you seen Friday's, Boston Globe?

"There's a section on the Boston Design Center, with a sidebar on "Designers Look to the Future." Well-respected designers make predictions for coming style in home design, and it's obvious that an appreciation for my decorating skill is blowing in the wind."

Skip looked over my shoulder. "Is she talking about 'the Southwestern influence — adobe colors?' "

Breida shook her head. "I think I've found it. Right under 'country pine has had its day.' See? 'One designer says that homes are going to be dirtier.' "

The Dragon groaned. "You'll notice that the author prefaces that prophecy with 'Some of the predictions seem downright bizarre.'

"If we're talking bizarre, that's about as downright as you can get."

"Not really," I objected. "I prefer to look at it as liberating. No more apologizing because your house is done in 'early yard sale.'

"No more rushing around to straighten up when company drops in — they'll assume that the ketchup bottle on the kitchen table and the sweat socks on the window sill are part of an artistic striving for a casual look.

"No more moving the furniture around to hide the stains or the worn spots. We'll move things around so we can highlight the flaws."

I sighed happily. "To think, all these years I've been ahead of my time."

Skip touched my shoulder. "I'll be happy to help you decorate," he said earnestly.

"I promise that I'll never wipe my feet before I come in. I'll always leave my dirty dishes on the table; I'll throw my jacket on the floor, and when people drop in I'll show them my room."

Breida shuddered. "The article said 'dirty,' not 'gross,' " she told him. "And there was nothing at all about 'sickening.' "

The Dragon looked up from the paper. "There's quite a bit about your housekeeping in here. One designer foresees a lot of 'wild and abstract' decor. Another says that homes must be flexible, to accommodate couples before, during and after childrearing. Is there an after childrearing?"

"I'm not sure," I mused. "We're stuck with so may animals that we let the kids get when they were little, that there hasn't been that much of a change in our lifestyle. And anyway, we seem to have slid right from childrearing into grandchild spoiling. As a matter of fact, I think with us the two phases overlapped. When our older kids were married and having babies, our younger ones were still smearing peanut butter on the walls."

"Speaking of peanut butter," the Dragon said, "one of the designers says that people will still continue to put a substantial part of their money into kitchens because 'that's where the sexy technology is.' He actually said that. 'Sexy technology.' "

"I don't know if you're aware of it," I told him, but I once had the first draft of a book written. It was called 'Violence, Raw Passion, Greed and Destruction."

"So?" he asked.

"It was a cookbook."

"Having eaten your cooking for over 30 years, I believe it."

"You survived," I reminded him.

He nodded. "So I did. And if memory serves, you have a lasagna in the oven. What do you say we go turn our kitchen into the height of fashion?"

Real estate firm proposes housing for Rte 3A

The Property Connection, a local real estate and development company, is proposing an 18-unit condominium complex along Rte. 3A for elderly and low income residents.

Paul Ferrini, owner of the Ripley Road business, notified selectmen of his proposal and asked their endorsement before he proceeds with definitive plans. According to Ferrini, unless selectmen approve the housing plan, he will not proceed with the design of the project.

"This is the first step for us," Ferrini explained. "We feel that sooner or later, the town must make a decision on providing low and moderate income housing. This property lends itself to this use."

The Property Connection has signed a purchase and sales agreement with the owner of the six-acre parcel located on Rte. 3A. The land is adjacent to the property proposed for construction of a super Stop and Shop.

"It's an ideal property for elderly housing," he noted. "It is away from the heavily residential area of town and it is very close to the proposed Stop and Shop. It's convenient, and we feel it's a very appropriate use of that land."

The realtor explained, "we are under an agreement with the owner of this property. We are now attempting to see if the town will cooperate with our plans. We want selectmen to look at this proposal very carefully. If they approve, we will proceed before the other town boards with more specific plans."

Ferrini envisions a "unique and exquisite blend of Victorian and contemporary architecture" within the cluster development. The Property Connection has constructed other housing in town, he noted, and the structures "are beautiful, well-constructed, and blend in with the flavor of this community."

According to the preliminary plans submitted to selectmen last week, Ferrini and his partner Stephen Bjorklund will construct 18 housing units, with six set aside specifically for low income residents. "However, a more thorough review of the guidelines would be necessary from our viewpoint upon receiving encouragement from you," they wrote in a letter to selectmen.

The complex will include three separate buildings. The land will be owned and maintained by an association of unit owners "thus insuring the archi-

Housing board eyes transfer of land

Town officials were scheduled to discuss this week a proposal by the housing authority to obtain 20 acres of school property for construction of low income housing.

The plan proposed by the local housing authority in conjunction with the state Department of Mental Health (DMH) will include eight units designated as an intermediate care facility for mentally retarded adults.

The land, currently under the jurisdiction of the school department, contains 60 acres directly behind the Deer Hill School extending the length of Sohier Street to Rte. 3A.

Housing authority chairman John Muncey said the proposed housing will encompass less than two of the requested 20 acres. But until perc tests are completed, it is not known where the building can be constructed, nor the diameter of its septic system.

Selectmen have given the housing authority space for an article within the June 23 special town meeting warrant. The article will request approval by the town of the land transfer.

Prior to town meeting, the housing authority will be meeting with the school committee. At the May 19 meeting, the school committee will be asked to transfer 20 acres of the land to the housing authority.

"If we don't get their approval then," Muncey said this week, "I guess this proposal is dead. We can't take land under the control of another town agency by eminent domain."

Maria Plante, who has diligently sought suitable property for an I.C.F./M.R. facility in Cohasset, said the Wednesday night meeting will provide town officials with information about the proposal. All questions will be answered at that meeting, she

Increased activity for Senior Center

By Jane Lane
Mariner Staff

It's been just five months, but director Kathy Bryanton says the senior center has progressed "better than expected."

More people have participated, more programs have developed, and more interest has generated from the community than she anticipated in the first months of the town's senior center.

"I think this is a growing center. Right now we still are hearing a lot of requests for new programs. It's starting to be a focal point for the seniors in Cohasset," she said. "More and more people are coming in and inquiring about our services. When I first came here, everyone said it would take a long time to develop. I have been very pleased with the response and the support from the community."

An indication of the center's recognition within the community, Bryanton noted, was the number of seniors who now compare it with the services offered at the Scituate senior center. "I've heard a lot of comment that it would be nice if we would offer as much as Scituate. But that center is ten years old. It's nice to see people comparing it with an established place...It's nice to think that this senior center can offer as much as any place," she noted.

The newest project undertaken by the Cohasset center is the walking club. There are now 20 participants who walk up to one mile two mornings a week. This program, Bryanton noted, was formed after several members indicated their interest in forming the group.

There are two groups of walkers, one takes off on Monday and Wednesday mornings, and the other is scheduled for Tuesday and Thursday mornings. The Monday and Wednesday group is under the direction of accomplished senior athlete Ann

To be or not to be Cohasset or Hingham?

Jack Nicholson the perfect man?

We may find out this summer. The Massachusetts Film Bureau will know this week whether Warner Brothers will come to Cohasset and Hingham to film a major motion picture starring Nicholson.

Cohasset selectmen gave the go-ahead Monday for the film to be shot in town this summer. The state film bureau is hungry to have the production located in this state. The only unknown at this point is whether the producers want Cohasset, Hingham, or an entirely different state.

The project which will start in July and take six to eight weeks, is a movie adaptation of the John Updike novel, "The Witches of Eastwick." Nicholson is scheduled to portray a man conjured up by three mystical women in search of "the perfect man." The scenario continues as the women question whether this spontaneous stranger is Satan in disguise. (The movie version will have a different conclusion from the book.)

The only stumbling block to the anticipated excitement, according to Julie Wren of the state film bureau, is whether the producers will opt for a Compton, R.I. location, or the Cohasset or Hingham site.

Wren has toured the state with the producer and director. Cohasset and Hingham were their top choices, "naturally," she commented. But the production designer, Wren said, preferred the actual Compton, R.I. location.

As of Wednesday, the state had yet to hear whether Compton is receptive to a role as host of the film.

"As a brainstorm, I decided to approach the Cohasset and Hingham selectmen and see if they would okay the shooting in their towns," Wren said.

Following their approval, Wren transcribed a telegram to the producers, advising them of the towns' hearty reception. The telegram was sent to Government meeting

The Town Government Structure Committee has called a meeting Thursday, May 8, to hear a presentation by an official from the State Department of Revenue about a review of town financial management.

"We have called this meeting to provide an opportunity for town officials and residents to hear about a service which could be of benefit to the town, " said John McNabb, Jr., Chairman.

"We invited representatives of the Selectmen, Advisory Committee, Capital Budget Committee, and Assessors to this meeting to give them the opportunity to learn about this service," said McNabb.

"We also invited the Treasurer-Collector, Town Accountant, and Executive Secretary, since they are also involved in town financial matters," said McNabb.

McNabb explained that at the meeting Louis Hayward of the State Department of Revenue will descibe the Departments free service of Financial Management Review of a towns financial management practices, and will answer questions about different kinds of review which are available.

"For example," said McNabb, "the town could ask the Department of Revenue for a general Financial Management Analysis, or for a specific review of something of specific concern to the town."

The meeting will be held Thursday, May 8, at 8 p.m. in the Town Hall.

Neighborhood concerns

Neighbors of the J.J. Henry Co. of South Main Street have requested selectmen's assistance in preventing another gas leak similar to the one which occurred March 17 at the site.

Twenty neighbors signed a letter to selectmen, which outlined their concerns about the recent oil leak from an underground storage tank at the facility. They asked selectmen how the problem will be resolved and if a new tank will be installed at the site.

Noting the landlord is based in New York, the neighbors said they are also concerned about the light industry currently doing business at the site. "We are concerned about the impact of the J.J. Henry Co. and its' tenants on the Gulf River Marsh," they wrote, and its delicate eco-system.

In response to their questions regarding the installation of another oil tank at 430 South Main St., Fire Chief Brock outlined the local, state and federal regulations. He said the leaking tank was removed from the site, with all necessary permits issued by the fire department and under the supervision of the department.

The local fire chief can deny a replacement tank if it is considered hazardous. A special permit would then be required. The state requires an approved type of tank, and installed with a monitoring and containment system. Federal regulations require that if the tank is for heating purposes only, it must be an approved type of tank.

Chief Brock added, "As a general comment on the possibility of a replacement tank being installed underground, I feel the requirements and permits would make the installation cost prohibitive and not likely in the present location."

No SAT problems

Cohasset students may breathe easier. The SAT's taken by 54 high school students last Saturday were proper and will not require a repeat performance.

Across the country, thousands of students who took the college entrance exams were given incomplete testing booklets. The state Department of Education is now deciding what procedure will be followed and who will have to take a second test.

But Ed Leonard, test supervisor in Cohasset, said all 54 students here received the proper booklets. "There was no problem here," he said this week.

Five students who completed the achievement tests also received the correct booklets and exam sheets.

Town Hall renovation plans

The architects selected for the town hall renovation plans have accepted a survey proposal from Perkins Engineering, Inc.

The survey, which will not exceed $2,000, will include preliminary drawings and spot elevations of the renovation work proposed for the town hall. An addition is planned for the structure, along with renovations to the interior offices at the building.

The preliminary engineering survey will be submitted to the architects, Donham and Sweeney of Boston, by May 14.

Flag presentation

In order to present a flag of Cohasset to her sister city in France, the selectmen voted Monday night to request $1,000 from capital budget.

In six weeks the mayor of Souppes-sur-Loing, France will be visiting Cohasset. Due to lack of adequate funds, no arrangements have been made for the production of the flag.

According to executive secretary Don Andrew, the silk screen process will cost $250 and materials will cost $150.

The board supported Rocco Laugelle's proposal to request $1,000 and make as many flags as possible.

"If we can't go out and spend $500 then we might as well close the doors," Laugell complained.

"We should offer to sell them for $200 a whack," suggested Cliff Mitman.

In other business, the Board

- accepted with regrets the resignation of Building Inspector Edward Poskus. Chairman Mary Jane MacArthur said until a new inspector is hired, one will be appointed in the interim. Don Andrew estimated a new inspector could begin by mid-July.
- Approved the rental of Town Hall to the South Shore Striders for use during their road race September 27.
- Changed the deadline for applications for vendors at Sandy Beach from June 1 to May 1. The number of vendors is limited to three with priority given to Cohasset residents.
- Denied the request of a town employee for payment of telephone bills acquired during a hospital stay and established a policy not to pay for any expenses unless medically related.

To be or not to be Cohasset or Hingham?. . .

Hollywood Wednesday.

Hingham selectmen chairman Edward Lewiecki said he talked with Wren several weeks ago about the venture. "I then talked with the other board members and they all agreed it would be a pleasant and good experience for the town. We would welcome the crews with all our hospitality," he said.

If a telegram from the selectmen can do the trick, Cohasset and Hingham may be the site of a Warner Brothers film starring Jack Nicholson, scheduled to begin this July.

Julie Wren of the Mass. Film Bureau, told Cohasset selectmen Monday night, the location for the $20+ million dollar screen adaptation of "The Witches of Eastwick," would either be Little Compton, Rhode Island, or a Cohasset/Hingham combination.

Wren explained that Little Compton appeared to be the favorite. However, that town's hesitancy is keeping Warner Bros. from a decision.

Wren told the board a telegram sent to Warner Bros. welcoming the film could influence the decision in favor of Cohasset.

"We will be opening our arms in welcome against their hesitancy," she explained.

If Warner Brothers does decide to film here, it will mean a 75-100 member crew in the area for approximately four to six weeks beginning in July.

"The people are among the best," Wren stressed. "They're all pros. They've shot all over the world. They will also generate a lot of commerce."

According to Wren, the Common area and the Unitarian meeting house would figure prominently in the shooting. Three homes would also be involved. Shop scenes would be filmed largely in Hingham.

Much of the film will also be done on a soundstage in Hollywood with reconstructed local scenery.

A large isolated estate is also needed for the film. Warner has shown interest in the Crane Estate in Ipswich.

The movie, based on the same premise as the novel, concerns three unmarried women (widowed and divorced) who get together and realize they have supernatural powers.

After complaining about the lack of exciting men in the town, they decide to create their own. Soon after, a stranger (Nicholson) moves into town and begins refurbishing a long-deserted mansion.

According to Wren, it is a wry script with an interesting twist at the end. She speculated because of the dollars involved, the rating would not be more than PG-13.

Selectmen decided to extend their welcome and support in the form of a telegram.

It will not include the suggestion that Jack Nicholson be forced to root for the Celtics, they added.

Democrat leaders address Coop 6

State Rep. Joseph DeNucci, a Democratic candidate for the state auditor, and Norma Fenochietti, of Marshfield, vice chairman of the Democratic State Committee, addressed a meeting of COOP-6, an organization of the Democratic committees in six area towns, at Kimball's-By-the-Sea Sunday.

DeNucci told an overflow audience that he hoped to increase the effectiveness of the office of auditor, adding that it is the responsibility of that office not only to oversee the funding of state projects and agencies, but also to make certain that services are effectively delivered to the people for whom they are intended.

Presently chairman of the Joint Legislative Committee on Human Services, DeNucci stressed his commitment to the homeless, the sick, the retarded, the mentally ill, the elderly, and other members of society who need and deserve the support of a compassionate citizenry.

Norma Fenochietti addressed two proposed charter amendments that will be considered at the Democratic State Convention in May and also stressed the need for cooperation among various Democratic bodies such as the national, state and town committees, and regional groups such as Coop-6.

"Together, far more effectively than if we were working in a vacuum," she said, "we can get the message out that we are a party with a proud past, a vital present, and promise for the future."

Chiropractic for HEALTH

by Dr. Kevin M. Neill, Chiropractic Physician

THE WARM-UP

The greatest protection for the human back is having strong, supple, elastic muscles, tendons and ligaments. Every athlete is aware of this. Professional athletes, in particular, perform many types of stretching exercises to warm up before entering a game. This increases the suppleness and elasticity of their muscles, ligaments and tendons. As a result, their tissues will not be stiff and contracted when violent use of them begins. It is this suppleness and elasticity which prevents damage or injury to their backs. If you indulge in sports or exercise regularly, engage in warm-up exercises before beginning your workout. Age is a vital factor. The older one is, the longer the warm-up should be.

For the athletically inclined as well as those who lead a more sedentary life, chiropractic can serve to address the discomforts arising from activity induced problems. At the COHASSET CHIROPRACTIC OFFICE, 760 Chief Justice Cushing Hwy., Suite 12, we will analyze your situation and provide the chiropractic applications that will serve to eliminate points of difficulty along the spinal column and help return the body to more normal function and comfort. tectural integrity and visual appeal of the project long after development is completed," they stated in the correspondence.

"We have a sincere interest in this," Ferrini commented. "And we have a personal commitment to a quality design. That's the way we like to build."

The company owner envisions a cluster development combining the architectural styles of the Victorian era with "lots of glass - a real open feeling."

Ferrini emphasized, "Rte. 3A is a very visible section of town. This will not be a slum. This will be an attractive, appealing addition to the town."

The partners developed an interest in providing this type of housing after learning the state may withhold discretionary grant money from the town. The state Executive Office of Communities and Development warned the town that state grant funding for the proposed sewer plan may be withheld if plans for low and moderate income are not forthcoming.

The six-acre parcel is currently "off the market," according to Ferrini. Under the terms of the purchase and sales agreement, the land will not be offered for sale to the public unless the housing project is denied. "If that's an indication that our plans are not supported, then the land will go back on the market," he said.

This is the first time The Property Connection has been involved in this type of housing proposal, Ferrini noted.

"This isn't the only use for this land, but we feel it is the best," he added. "We want to do this right. If the town approves, we can do something that will benefit the town, and be developed in a profitable manner. It can be done sensitively and in an exquisite way. We want to show the town this type of housing does not have to be an eyesore. It's got to be done right."

The company owners stressed unless selectmen give their initial endorsement to the proposal, the plan will not proceed. "It's our attempt to see if the town is receptive to this type of plan. We are going to proceed very carefully. This is simply a general overview now - an initial inquiry. If we get some encouragement, we'll check with the other town boards.

"If we get some positive feedback, we'll get going on some substantive plans. This will require enormous planning and designing. We're willing to go forward if there is solid suport from selectmen. But if there isn't, that's it. We're not going to twist the town's arm."

By submitting the preliminary plans to selectmen, Ferrini and Bjorklund hope the board members "will make inquiry to the other town boards."

"Sooner or later," Ferrini commented, "the town has to make a decision. And this property lends itself to this use. It's a first step."

In the correspondence to selectmen the realtors noted, "should you feel that more than six units would be advantageous, you might wish to consider extending this proposed project onto the adjacent parcel of land owned by the Town of Cohasset."

School committee continues search for principal

Monday was a night for discussion by members of the school committee who reviewed subjects ranging from an attendance policy to athletic team dismissals to the continuing search for a high school principal.

Regarding the latter, Supt. Eugene Crowell informed the committee that six candidates, including Osgood teacher Christine Collins and assistant high school principal Gino Digirolamo, were interviewed Saturday by a combination of students, residents and staff members. Six more candidates for the position of high school principal will be interviewed by the same groups this Saturday.

PSO President Nancy Sandell told the committee the experience worked well. Four small groups interviewed the candidates individually. "Each committee differed in its personality," she said. "I loved every hour of it."

Asst. Supt. Stephen Hart said the candidates seemed to enjoy the process which began at 8 a.m. and continued through the day. The residents and candidates broke for lunch which was served in the cafeteria. That was an opportunity for the interviewers to discuss the candidates collectively, Sandell noted.

School committee member Barbara Bliss said rather than being cumbersome, the large mixture of interviewers seemed to be a successful selection method. "I think this is very exciting," she said. "I'd like to keep this dialogue going onto other issues which have to be decided."

The next round of interviews is scheduled for 8 a.m. Saturday.

In a separate discussion, committee member Diana Kornet talked about the problem of athletic teams being dismissed before the regular dismissal time. Allowing any students an early dismissal in order to travel to athletic competitions is unfair to those who do not compete and must stay for the remainder of the school day, she said.

Kornet said students have witnessed some teams leaving the building for away games as early as 1:30 in the afternoon.

Supt. Crowell said he had talked with bus coordinator Janet Figuereido who assured him the buses do not regularly depart at 1:30 p.m. But away games played in Middleboro and Sandwich require a longer travel time, he said.

Sometimes, he noted, a bus driver must make a double run to various locations because of a shortage of drivers. That will result in a bus leaving for an away game early in the afternoon.

"I just can't justify backing into the academic day," Kornet said.

Committee chairman Joseph Nedrow said many of the travel problems could be rectified if the coaches were trained bus drivers. If the school could sponsor a driving course, the coaches could participate, he suggested.

"They're on the bus anyway," he said. "So why can't they learn to drive the bus themselves?"

Supt. Crowell said that is a suggestion the school department has attempted to pursue. Drivers need a Class II license to operate a school bus.

Another discussion Monday night centered on the need to again review the high school attendance policy.

Member Richard Conley said residents informed him their youngsters have been academically penalized because their parents have failed to submit a written excuse to the school after the student's absence.

Conley stated the attendance policy, which requires a written excuse within two days of the absence, tends to penalize the good students. If a written note is not submitted within the time requirement, a student may not make up the work he missed during his absence.

Other committee members said they have experienced problems with the policy. Chairman Nedrow noted there is also a problem in the various ways teachers interpret the policy. One teacher might allow make-up exams, and another will not, he said.

Conley asked the administration to review the policy. Otherwise, he said, "we're talking about a three-term honor roll student missing the honor roll because his parents forget to get the note in. The penalty is too severe. We have to review the situation. The intent is there to work within the system."

Supt. Crowell noted there are pitfalls if the committee decides to back off from a policy. If students fail to come to class prior to a vacation, for instance, teachers and students will interpret those days as 'light attendance' days. "Is that fair to the teachers who are trying to teach those days prior to vacation, or the students who come to class?" he asked.

He said when committee members become aware of specific problems, they should contact the school administration. The facts on the individual situation could be shared at that time, he noted.

Vacation schedule plan

The school committee Monday night adopted the school calendar for the 1986-1987 school year.

Included in that schedule will be a Christmas vacation to begin Friday, Dec. 19 and resume Monday, Jan. 5.

Because Jan. 2 falls on a Friday, and Dec. 22, 23 and 24 will be a Monday, Tuesday, and Wednesday this year, many people will likely take those days off, Supt. Crowell predicted. The only alternative, he said, would be to hold classes until noon Dec. 24.

In that case, the school year could conclude earlier than the scheduled June 19 date.

Supt. Crowell said the fuel savings incurred by a two-week Christmas vacation is an added incentive to the schedule, along with the extended travel time. All other area schools will be closed during that time, he added.

The teachers decided to again drop the county-wide teachers day in October in order to extend the winter vacation schedule.

The committee unanimously adopted the calendar.

New meeting time

In order to accommodate more teachers and students who may like to attend, the school committee will be meeting at 2:45 p.m. May 19.

At that meeting, the committee will discuss a proposal to implement a modified eight period day at the high school to include band three times a week.

Also on the agenda that afternoon will a discussion with the housing authority members regarding their request to transfer school-owned property for the construction of low income housing. The property, which is located behind the Deer Hill School, is a site proposed by the local housing authority for low income housing with eight units to be set aside for mentally retarded adult residents.

Some day when my children are old enough to understand the logic that motivates a mother, I will tell them;

I loved you enough to ask you where you were going, with whom, and what time you would get home.

I loved you enough to insist that YOU buy the bike that we could afford to give you, with your own money.

I loved you enough to be silent and let you discover that your hand-picked friend was a creep.

I loved you enough to make you return a Milky Way—with a bite out of it—to a drugstore, and confess: "I stole this."

I loved you enough to stand over you for two hours while you cleaned your roon, a job that would have taken me fifteen minutes.

I loved you enough to let you see anger, disappointment, disgust, and tears in my eyes.

I loved you enough to admit I was wrong, and ask for your forgiveness.

I loved you enough to let you stumble, fall and hurt.

I loved you enough to let you assume the responsibility for your actions at 6, 10 and 16 years.

But, most of all, I loved you enough to say NO when you hated me for it. That was the hardest part of all!

Cohasset center prepares for Senior Center week

Leonard. The other group is guided by walking enthusiast Jane Tilden.

As Bryanton explained, the walking groups were formed not only to promote physical well being among the senior citizens, but as a social group where friends have an opportunity to walk and chat as they exercise.

Bryanton said the beginning of a walking group coincided with the observance of Senior Center Week, May 11-17.

Tuesdays and Thursdays, she explained, before the group begins their trek they have warm up and cool down exercises with center instructor Joanne Shepherd. The group then begins the walk at their own pace, with leaders to help with the newer walkers who might linger toward the rear.

"We were really lucky to get Jane and Ann to help out. I asked Jane if she would go with me to a training seminar on walking at Tufts. And she was available to help out on Tuesday and Thursdays. Then I asked Ann if she could help out on Monday and Wednesdays. Ann is really developed into a great senior athlete. She was honored as the top women athlete at last years' senior Olympic games in Quincy," Bryanton noted.

The director explained the ideas for new programs and projects at the center are the direct result of requests from the participants. If they express an interest, Bryanton will attempt to develop a program suited to their needs.

One such request resulted in a new stenciling class at the center under the direction of artist Nancy Clapp. "I asked some of the people here what they would enjoy, and several said stenciling. So Nancy is beginning a weekly class, showing them how to stencil. This is the way we get new people into the center, too," Bryanton said.

An exercise class with Joanne Shepherd has proven popular among many seniors. "They are really thrilled with themselves," Bryanton commented. "They are so happy they can do the exercises. And they feel good. It's very rewarding to see that. One women was reluctant to join the class because she was overweight. But with Joanne's help, she can now do all the exercises, and she's on a diet. She feels wonderful and she's so happy with herself," the director said.

Bryanton noted a certain group of people join the exercising, walking and line dancing classes. Another more introvertd type of person tends to join the art classes. One class is particularly suited to the senior citizen who does not want the attention of a large class, but simply wants a quiet time away from work or home.

Maura Ditmar of Cohasset teaches a painting class for person who have never painted. The small class meets every Friday morning for two hours. "All you need is an interest in learning to paint," Bryanton said. "But even though these people have never painted, they are now doing wonderful things. And it's two hours of quiet, reflective time they need in their lives. These are people who had no confidence in their abilities. But Maura is a beautiful instructor who brings the best out in the class."

Their art work will be proudly displayed at the Senior Tea which will be held May 14 at 2:30 p.m. The public is invited to the tea where interested residents will meet members of the Council on Aging and the senior center staff members. The programs at the center will be explained at that time.

When asked what she would like the center to offer, the director replied, "I would like more cultural programs, where the seniors have access to the programs at the Nickerson Theatre or the Huntington Theatre, I would like to have more stichery classes which we hope to start in June. And I would

around town

☐ Francoise Najar joined the Jack Conway Company as a sales associate in the Cohasset office.

She has a teacher's degree from the French Institute in Austria and taught there before joining the public relations department of the United Nations.

She and her husband Robert live in Cohasset and are the parents of two sons.

☐ The works of Jeanne Lonnquist Replogle of Cohasset will be on exhibit with 19 other Pine Manor alumnae artists from across the country from April 28 to May 19, 1986. The exhibit is the College's first major alumnae art show, and will be held in the renovated Hess Gallery in the newly completed Annenberg Library and Communications Center. A celebration honoring the artists will be held on Saturday, May 17 from 11:30 a.m. to 2 p.m. It is free and open to the public. The exhibit marks the beginning of a year-long celebration of Pine Manor's 75th Anniversary.

☐A special note of appreciation to Paul Narkewitz, foreign language teacher at Cohasset High School, for the wonderful support he is giving our Cultural Exchange Committee in their efforts to establish relations with our Sister City in France, Souppes-sur-Loing. Paul's Pen Pal program and the contacts he has made with the teachers in Souppes have given the Sister City Exchange a terrific boost. We look forward to hearing more about his trip to France, especially the afternoon he spent in Souppes.

☐It seems appropriate to give a special salute to a special lady "around town" what with Mother's Day this weekend and all of us thinking of what the average lady does in a given day... not only is Helen Watson a beloved Mom, she is a busy gal! There is something special that she does, besides the every-day working/running a house being a Mom — Helen, at least once a month, spreads cheer at the local nursing homes by going in, on her own, and playing the piano for all of the folks. Can you think of a better thing to cheer anyone up, or anything more fun than a wonderful tune to get you "up"? Hats off to you Helen, that's a grand gesture that is appreciated by all.

☐Jay Contis is having a super time touring Europe! When last heard about, he had seen nine countries in as many days, and was going to meet fellow-CHS mate (1985 grads) James Dillon, who is stationed in the service over there. Jay's Uncle is giving him the "tour", and should be a master at it, since he has lived there for several years. He'll be home this week, be sure to have him fill you in on the details!

Cohasset Cancer Crusade worker at "Opening Night" of 1986 Crusade. Alfred Odermatt, of Cohasset, center, a board member of the South Shore Unit of the Cancer Society and a neighborhood captain in the Cohasset Crusade, was among those greeted at the Crusade Opening Night at the Sheraton Tara, Framingham, by Joyce Kulhawik, of WBZ-TV and Frank Avruch, of WCVB-TV.

☐Welcome home to Joanna Fone, who has been studying in Rome since January. Joanna is a junior at Trinity College.

☐Two Cohasset ladies were honored by South Shore Hospital recently, and deservedly so! Dorothy Roberts has donated 1000 hours of her services, and Edith Quigley has donated 100 hours. Dorothy Roberts also received a special honor at the Cohasset Knoll; she was enrolled in the "Hall of Fame" there, for one year of service. What would these places be like without people like these, ready to give of their time and cheerful dispositions?

☐We certainly envy Tara Volungis and her recent "voyage". Tara just returned from the U.S. Space Camp, located in the NASA complex in Huntsville, Alabama (also knows as Rocket City, USA). While there Tara took astronaut fitness training, helped build working rocket models, experienced weightlessness, and conducted a simulated mission in a mock-up of the Space shuttle. She lived in barracks, sampled space food (freeze-dried chicken just isn't the same as Mom's home cooking I'll bet!), practiced splash-downs in the swimming pool, and went on a simulated space shuttle mission. The only thing that will compare will be next year's trip back, when Tara will be in level II and everything will be that much more complicated and more to learn. What an experience!

☐On the subject of rockets, everyone is talking about Todd Henry's "rocket"...of a different nature of course. He "blasted" a home run in last week's CHS baseball game, and it was said to be the longest homerun by a "righty" that anyone can remember. Keep up the good work Todd, and congratulations.

☐Don't forget the Derby Fair this weekend, Saturday the 10th to be exact. The fair will include games and rides for kiddos, pony rides, moonwalk, miniature golf, face painting, clowns and new books. It will also feature a Gourmet Galley, gifts for Mother's Day, a super raffle, and a rare and old books collection. Something for everyone!

☐Left out two volunteers that were recognized at South Shore Hospital recently, let me be sure to list them now...Margaret Keaating donated 100 hours and Martha Douglas gave 1000 hours. Everyone appreciates your efforts ladies, good work indeed.

☐Welcome to our new postmaster, James L. Hooley. Wonder what our former Postmaster is doing now, besides spending his Megabucks that is.

☐Be sure to listen to 105.7 FM (WVBF) on May 22 if you are interested in bidding on a Larry Bird autographed basketball! The cause is certainly a most note-worthy one, as the proceeds will go to the Desiree A. Yess Scholarship Fund. This scholarship is given to two women scholar-basketball players at Massasoit Community College in Brockton. A wonderful way to honor a grand girl who loved basketball.

☐Congratulations to all of you newly-elected officers of the PSO. It's a mighty task to run such an efficient organization, but the footsteps that have been left by the past officers will help to make your path a successful one, I'm sure.

☐Steve Ghetto of Cohasset, a senior administrative science major at Colby College in Waterville, Maine, has recently been selected for the Coach's Award by men's ice hockey coach Mickey Goulet. The award is given each year to the player showing the most outstanding leadership and dedication. In addition, Ghetto also received his varsity letter in hockey for the 1985-86 season. The Colby White Mules finished their season with a 13-10-2 overall record.

Ghetto is the son of Barry I. Ghetto and a graduate of Middlesex School in Concord.

☐Take time to fill us in with your news, it's fun for all to read and/or report!

Selectmen approve funds for sewer system prep

The board of selectmen granted approval recently to the Sewer Commission to expend the remaining $2,857 in a $30,000 appropriation for preparation of the new sewer system. The board is pending approval of a $15,000 payment in engineering and legal fees.

At the December town meeting, $30,000 was appropriated to the sewer commission for use in negotiations with the state.

Ted Guild, vice chairman of the sewer commission requested payment of bills totalling $15,372 to the law firm of Goodwin, Proctor & Hoar, and to Ward Engineering. Total expenditures would then equal $27,142.

According to Guild, the bills deal with areas of negotiations with the state and with negotiable plans for the inter-municipal agreement with Hull. Guild also requested authorization to expend the balance between the two firms.

Guild indicated the state now requires a far higher level of detail in plans than they did earlier, resulting in higher engineering costs.

Chairman Mary Jane MacArthur reported selectmen had seen none of the four bills reportedly issued by Goodwin, Proctor and Hoar to Town Counsel Richard Henderson. The firm agreed to send copies of all bills to selectmen and to the sewer commission.

Selectman James Gallagher, saying he'd "be very stingy with the taxpayers' money," questioned a 155 percent overhead charge on the engineering bill.

Sewer commissioner, Gary Vanderweil, an owner of an engineering firm, responded that 157 to 160 percent is the standard charge in the field.

The board approved expenditure of the $2,857 but voted to withhold approval of the unpaid bills until they could see the actual bills.

In other business:

— The special town meeting is set for Monday, June 22. The warrant will be open until the end of the business day, Monday, May 5.

— The board gave a vote of confidence to the newly-institutedV.F.W.Post9150 to proceed through the proper channels to purchase the property on Route 3A that was formerly the Sportsman's Club.

— The board approved a request from the Greek Orthodox Church to hold its annual Taverna on July 4, 5 and 6. The three-day cultural event is the main fundraising event of the church.

The church agreed to discontinue the music at 9 p.m. as they did last year, and to have a flap on the side of the tent facing the abutters.

— The board approved a bill waiving building inspection fees for all work on all town-owned buildings and buildings to be given to the town.

The board also deleted the last line in the bill which stated, "No other building fee may be waived," in order to make allowance for such structures as Girl Scout cabins.

— All step raises must now come to the Selectmen 45 days prior to the effective date.

— The resignation of George F. Fellows from the Council on Aging was accepted with regrets.

Bassings Beach shellfishing closed

State environmental officials ordered North River shellfishing beds closed May 1 in what has become routine procedure in recent years, but concede that no water samples have been drawn in the area in seven months.

Also, the water is not likely to be tested during the closure period ending Nov. 1, according to Toina Davies, a bacteriologist in the state Department of Environmental Quality Engineering's Southeast Regional office in Lakeville.

"I can't understand why no samples have been taken" when they are normally drawn three times a year, Davies said Friday. "I don't know what happened."

DEQE last collected and analyzed North River samples Oct. 9, she said.

Scientists test samples for the presence of fecal-coliform bacteria, an indicator of possible human sewage in tested water. They believe shellfish taken from contaminated water is unsafe for consumption.

The office also tests samples from Cohasset Harbor beds in both Cohasset and Scituate. Shellfishing beds in the entire harbor is indefinitely closed, and some areas are closed permanently, Davies said.

Shellfishing areas near Scituate's Bassing Beach and Briggs Harbor are closed indefinitely, meaning they could be reopened in the future. All but a small portion of shellfishing areas on the Cohasset side of the harbor are closed permanently, she said.

DEQE's Lakeville office has two inspectors that draw and analyze samples from 137 shellfishing areas in the region, which includes coastal areas from Cohasset Harbor to Cape Cod and the Rhode Island border, she said.

Two other inspectors conduct more-intensive surveys in areas that face the most-severe contamination problems.

Housing options

Is elderly housing needed in Cohasset? Is it wanted?

The same questions must be asked whether our community wants and needs to provide housing for low and moderate income families.

A recent survey conducted by the Mariner, and uniformly recognized throughout town, indicates a need to provide additional housing for the elderly. It is estimated that one-third of our town's population is over the age of 60.

With families gone and incomes drastically reduced, we must look to ways to provide for them. We all feel the need to take care of those who have cared for us. They are our own. It is our turn to meet their needs, to give them the support and caring they richly deserve.

The answer comes so quickly, yet it has not come true. Where will all this additional housing be located? And who will provide it?

There are steps being taken right now in separate directions. One plan is proposed by a private developer on land he owns along North Main Street.

Another private developer has initiated plans to construct a residential cluster development along Rte. 3A.

And now the housing authority has created a plan to take some school-owned property and construct housing there.

We can't say at this time what plan is best. Perhaps all three. But whatever the outcome, the bottom line remains firm. We need the housing and we can't stall any longer. No more excuses, no more hestitation. The plans are there, now it's time to prove our commitment.

The town's obligation to provide low and moderate income housing is not as overwhelmingly appreciated.

As many are defiant of this requirement as are residents in support. The state is pressuring us into providing plans for this housing. We stand to lose precious state grants if we do not indicate a willingness to make preparations.

We must advise the town to heed that warning. The worse we can do is to be bullied into a corner, to wait until our hand is forced by the state. Decisions made in crisis situations are no decisions at all. They are reactive responses that most often harm a community rather than help.

The town must look at the plans currently proposed for the construction of low and moderate income housing. Two private developers are now proposing units of moderately-priced rental units. They may be the answer the town needs to provide the state, without loathsome commands shoved down our throats by the government.

Maybe these plans are not the answer. But they deserve serious review by town officials.

And if they aren't the answer, then the ball is in their court. If our town officials are displeased with these proposals, it is their responsibility to develop alternatives.

If they turn down these plans, they must look toward a new direction. And there better be some answers for the state, for the residents, and for all those seeking shelter in our community.

Petition article to review sewer plan

Letters

To the Editor:

The following petition, with the requisite signatures of registered voters, has been delivered to the selectmen for an article at the next special town meeting:

"To see if the town will appropriate $20,000 to reanalyze the costs of various options for providing sewer service to the area defined at Town Meeting, June 1984, using funding levels consistent with advice from the applicable state agency, and adjusting previously estimated costs for escalation and to incorporate any other cost information now available. Options are to include, but be not limited to, Metcalf & Eddy, Phase 1, and the Ward Plan with the same sewered area and purchasing a share of the Hull treatment plant. Technical features not approved by DEQE, such as 2" sewer lines, are to be excluded from consideration. Analysis to include estimated annual operating costs of each option, and average total annual cost to each property owner in each class (unsewered, newly sewered, or already sewered). Assessment to include appropriate estimates for rock excavation."

There are two reasons to vote for this article. First, the Hull connection may fall through, because of rejection at Hull town meeting, unacceptable conditions or costs imposed by one party or another, etc. If so, we had better have an immediate and quantitative idea of what other options we have, rather than be blank faces. Second, even if the deal seems to be moving along, it would be well to know how its cost compares with what alternatives still are available, before we jump off the dock and tie ourselves to Hull. It's a stop gap "solution" which DEQE may favor because it does resolve the immediate deficiencies. But that doesn't mean that is the best long-term solution for Cohasset.

There may be some who favor the Hull connection, but I haven't met one yet. If we are not to stumble dumbly downward to that "solution," then other constructive action must be taken. This article is the first step.

Some people are spreading the rumor that this investigation will cut off state funds, and that the state has virtually ordered Hull to allow Cohasset to connection. That's untrue. However, we will lose funding and have to proceed entirely by borrowing, if we play around too long. All the more reason to move quickly to reexamine the options — we should have done it long ago, when it became abundantly evident that the great promises of the Ward Plan had evaporated.

It is deplorable to be treated unfairly

To the Editor:

I am writing in support of a Cohasset citizen who is being treated unfairly by town officials.

Walter and Nancy Sweeney seek to build a house on Bow Street. The lot they want to build on does not meet current standards for a septic system as it borders Little Harbor and the soil does not meet current percolation testing requirements. Their petitions with the Cohasset Board of Health for a permit to build have beenrejected out of hand with no attempt made to assist them in developing a plan that would protect the community's health interests while allowing them to build.

The rejection of their request is unfair on two grounds.

First, where Walter and his wife seek to build a house is the foundation of the home of his grandparent, James Sweeney. He would probably have had no problems if he had simply inherited the house and continued a long Cohasset tradition of a Sweeney living by the edge of Little Harbor. However, the house burned and all that remains is the foundation.

Secondly, it is common knowledge that builders and owners with similar settings and soil percolation problems have been consistently permitted by the Board of Health to build in Cohasset in recent years. In fact, within a short distance of the proposed site, also on the edge of Little Harbor, is one of the more blatant examples of accommodation.

I find it deplorable that a descendant of a long-time Cohasset family who wants to make his home on the family homestead, is so unfairly discriminated against. Is it too much to hope that our town officials would want long-time citizens of the community and their descendants to believe they were wanted and had a place in their home town?

If May is here can the AFS Auction Evening be far behind?

The happy answer is the auction will take place Friday, May 16.

But this time the evening will have a new, more sophisticated look, according to Jo-Ann Rossi, AFS Chapter President.

"Of course we will have great items to bid on, as always," said Rossi, "but we really want people to enjoy themselves, so we are holding the Auction Evening at Hugo's were folks can sample the free hors d'oeuvres, order any drink from the no-host bar, enjoy the great view and see all their friends."

As in the past, admission is free. Auction Preview begins at 7:30 p.m. The auction will start promptly at 8 p.m.

Auction Chair Jayne Nussdorfer and her committee have been searching near and far for some new and unique items as well as the old favorites, such as an afternoon of flying over Cape Cod or a weekend at a ski house in Vermont.

According to Rossi, proceeds from the auction go towards maintaining the AFS scholarship program in Cohasset,whichprovides international exchange opportunities for high school students.

This year four Cohasset students have been accepted for the program and will be travelling to such places as Brazil, Indonesia and Germany.

Cohasset is also hosting one foreign student this year, Miss Carine Mortiaux of Belgium, who is living with the William Lean family on South Main Street.

If you would like to make a donation to the auction or would like more information about the Auction Evening, contact Jo-Ann Rossi at 383-6818 or Jane Goedecke at 383-6935.

Sister city plans first visit

Mayor and Madame Prudhomme of Souppes-Sur-Loing, France and their 13-year-old daughter, accompanied by two other families, will arrive in Cohasset Wednesday, June 25.

Many local businesses and organizations have been most generous in offering their time and services to help make the occasion eventful for both Cohasset and her visitors.

Some of the many activities being planned include Bastille Day and Fourth of July celebrations, a town-wide reception and dinner at Kimballs-by-the-Sea, a town-wide picnic at the Sailing Club, a clambake on Martha's Vineyard and a Cohasset Garden Club tea.

This first visit is a vital step in building a meaningful relationship between the two towns. The Cultural Exchange Committee is hopeful that all townspeople will get involved and participate in the various events scheduled for the week.

The Cultural Exchange Committee is compiling information for interested Cohasset families who might like to receive a young person or small family in exchange for visiting a host family in Souppes.

Both Sister Towns would like to begin this exchange with a small group this summer. Anyone who is interested in participating should call Elizabeth Warren 383-0336, Judy Keim 383-1026, or Marylou Lawrence 383-6776.

Connie Parker, who has corresponded with the Historical Society in Souppes, will host the next meeting of the Cultural Exchange Committee at the Lothrup House Monday, May 5, at 8 p.m. All are welcome to attend.

Spring flea market

The Cohasset Historical Society will hold its Spring Flea Market Saturday, May 24 at the Caleb Lothrop House, 14 Summer Street.

Features of the Society's Flea Markets are a diversity of items donated over the winter. Household equipment, kitchenware, toys, clothing, records, toys, artworks and other collectables are but a few of the categories found at the Society's spring sale. Featured also, as before, will be large-sized posters of past seasons' Music Circus performers.

Hours of the flea market will be from 9 to 2. Dealer's spaces will be available for $10. Call the Society at 383-6930 or 0773 to make reservation. The Society is still accepting contributions of good, useable items for its spring sale.

All proceeds from the Flea Market go toward maintaining the Society's three historical buildings in Cohasset and toward the continuing community activity of the Historical Society.

For the best selection of pre-owned Flea Market items, plan to arrive at the Lothrop House Flea Market early.

REAL ESTATE GUIDELINES

HOME INSPECTION CONTINGENCIES

Today, many offers to purchase homes have a contingency allowing the buyers some time to get a home inspector or some other structural expert to go through the property. If something turns up that the buyers don't like, they can back out of the agreement without losing their earnest money deposit. While these contingencies make sellers a little nervous, they're a good idea.

The time period is negotiable, and in most parts of the country the buyers' have about a week. During this period, the buyer can usually cancel the contract for almost any reason by stating that the structural report was not satisfactory. A couple with terminal buyers' remorse, for example, can cite some minor defect - and every house has at least one - as a reason to withdraw the offer.

There's a positive side, however. Often knowing they have a brief cooling off period will encourage buyers who would not otherwise make an offer to take the plunge, and the vast majority of these people will go ahead with the purchase. Also, the inspector usually addresses and overcomes misgivings, and confirms their decision to move ahead with the purchase.

Unicorn Singers present program here May 9-10

At Broad Cove House in Hingham recently, Margo Euler stopped briefly to explain why the Unicorn Singers were spending their Monday evening rehearsal square dancing instead of singing. "Actually, we sing and dance simultaneously in this scene," she laughed. "It's especially tricky because the steps must be danced in precise sequence with out the customary "caller" since there is dialogue between the two leads at the same time! As the chorus sings the old American folk song "Sourwood Mountain" they are executing the steps to "Pistol-packin' Momma" which I chose because it's especially appealing to watch — square dancing isn't intended to be a spectator activity!"

The Unicorn Singers directed by Euler are in the final week of rehearsal for their productionof Kurt Weill's "Down in the Valley" which will be held Friday and Saturday May 9 and 10 at 8 p.m. at Norwell High School. They have established a tradition of presenting musical theatre pieces in which they act and dance, as well as sing, beginning 7 years ago with Menotti's "The Unicorn, The Gorgon, and The Manticore" also at Norwell High!) More recently they presented court dancing in elaborate costume ("A Renaissance Recreation") and cavorted in golden robes with wings and halos for "A Masque of Angels".

Last season they presented a concert version of the Gershwin masterpiece "Porgy and Bess".

"We have a large number of multi-talented singers from all over the South Shore who are at home on the stage," Euler said. "It's an opportunity to do chamber opera, madrigal ballet, and other works definitely outside the realm of the traditional chorus. But we also enjoy singing standard choral pieces of the masters, so we usually spend the late fall and early winter doing that."

Jeanne Scammell of Norwell and Rich Jensen of Canton will play the leading roles in the one-act folk opera; (this represents something of a feat for Jensen, who just last Saturday finished playing the demanding lead in "Kiss Me Kate" produced by Hingham Civic Music Theatre). The villain of the piece is played by John Kaloyanides of Hingham, and Norman Shaw (of Weymouth) and Scott Ketcham (of Cohasset , who has also designed the scenery), round out the principal roles.

The chorus itself is featured in the first half of the program, singing entertaining and challenging arrangements of familiar folk tunes, set by American composers Aaron Copland and Kirke Mechem and Canadian Harry Somers. Carolyn Curtis of Marshfield is the pianist for the concert, and will be joined by a small chamber orchestra in the opera.

Tickets are available at The Hingham Square Bookshop and Pamela's Place in Norwell. They can also be obtained by calling 749-0162, 834-8971, or 843-2653 for advance reservation to avoid a higher ticket price at the door. Norwell High School is located off South Street, one mile from Assinippi on Main Street (Route 123).

The Unicorn Singers enjoy themselves during rehearsals for their upcoming concert in Norwell. Tickets for the May 9 and 10 concert are available at the Hingham Bookshop and Pamela's Place in Hingham.

The speaker for the evening will be Sarah Young. A resident of Scituate, Young is a senior partner for the business investment/public relations firm of Wallace and Wallace. She previously ran for state representative and is now a business broker.

Harvard Health plan discussion

A new health-care program for senior citizens will be introduced by Harvard Community Health Plan (HCHP) Tuesday, May 13, at the Cohasset Senior Center, located at 3 North Main Street in Cohasset. The presentation is open to the public and begins at 11 a.m.

Called "SeniorCare," the program allows Medicare beneficiaries to receive prepaid health care from HCHP at a lower premium than most supplemental health insurance plans. "SeniorCare" features a variety of benefits, including the following:

- full coverage of medical services provided by HCHP clinicians, including routine and preventive examinations, diagnosis and treatment, and hospitalization
- medications prescribed by an HCHP physician and purchased at an HCHP pharmacy for only $1 for up to a month's supply
- eye exams for only $1 and a free pair of eyeglasses every two years when prescribed and purchased through HCHP
- no costly deductibles or bothersome paperwork

Harvard Community Health Plan's "SeniorCare" representative, Peg Zolli, will explain the program in detail at the May 13 presentation. Everyone attending will have an opportunity to ask questions and see an informative slide show.

For more information, call Peg at 421-8815.

'Focus on Prevention'

There are still openings for Cohasset parents of sixth grade students to register for the workshops series "Focus on Prevention," to be held on May 13, 20 and 27 from 7:30 to 9 p.m. at a private home in Cohasset.

Please call the Social Service League office at 383-0771 or 383-0821 for further information.

"Gramercy Ghost" casting

The Cohasset Dramatic Club has cast its spring show "Gramercy Ghost" by American playwright John Cecil Holm. Directed by Brewster Pattyson of Cohasset, the comedy will be presented at the Cohasset Town Hall Friday and Saturday, May 16 and 17 at 8 p.m. and again Sunday, May 18, a matinee at 2 p.m.

Tickets are available at Fleming's, Cohasset Center. Cost is $4 per ticket. Senior Citizens are invited to attend the Sunday, May 18 matinee at no charge.

Sally Rossi Langer of Scituate plays the lead role of Nancy Willard, a young career woman living in the Gramercy Park area of New York City, who inherits the ghost of a Revolutionary War soldier from her landlady.

Hal McLaughlin of Hingham plays the title role of Nathaniel Coombes, the ghost who is visible and audible only to Nancy (and the audience).

The fun in "Gramercy Ghost' revolves around the comic confusion that results from Nancy's conversations with a spirit whom no one else can see. Douglas McCabe of Scituate appears as Nancy's fiance, Parker Burnett, a stuffy, humorless stockbroker. Jim Pickel of Braintree plays Charley Stewart, a brash, happy-go-lucky reporter seeking a story about Nancy's late landlady.

Robin Lord of Cohasset appears as Margaret Collins, Nancy's housekeeper-companion; Fran Hanks of Hingham as Augusta Ames, an attorney; and Peter Tolman as Officer Morrison, a policeman driven up the wall by the dizzy goings-on in Gramercy Park. Judy Gutry andTeri Finegan, both of Cohasset, play an ambulance driver and her assistant.

Three other Revolutionary War era ghosts appear on the scene—Irv and Rocky, Soldiers, played by Dick Donovan of Scituate and David Sweeney of Cohasset; and Molly, a young woman, played by Bonnie Haley of Scituate.

"Gramercy Ghost" opened in New York at the Morosco Theater on April 26, 1951, and has been a consistent favorite since that time with audiences of all ages.

New cable program

A new cable television series entitled The Secret of Fatima, will be shown on Sunday evenings beginning May 4 on Channel 12 at 1 p.m.

These programs are presented by Fatima Today, a group of people from the South Shore who are aware of the message given to us by the Mother of God and wish to share it.

Plan to tune in on Sunday evenings at 9 p.m. beginning May 4, on Channel 12.

Boys tennis comes back with strong win

By Lisa Shumaker
Mariner Correspondent

The boys continued their successful season as they came back from vacation and promptly beat Norwell 4-1 Monday. One might think the boys should have been rusty after a week off, when in fact they came back just as strong as ever.

Second and third singles players Chris Ryan and Fred Wilshire both walked away with victories. The two doubles teams consisting of Dan Farwell and Derick Lacks, and Steven Meyers and Jason Marsac also played exceptionally well and won their matches as well.

Wednesday, the Skippers traveled to Middleboro and crushed their weaker opponent 5-0. The entire team had a great day as the decisive score would suggest. Furthermore, Cohasset was able to change its lineup a little so that other players were able to get some experience on the court.

First, second and third singles players Rich Reddick, Chris Ryan, and Fred Wilshire all soundly thrashed their opponents. The first doubles team consisting of Steven Meyers and Derick Lacks also pulled out an impressive victory. Newcomers Greg Wallingford and Wayne Warren-Young on the second doubles team were caught in a tight match, but the boys hung on tough and managed to come out on top.

Friday, the boys were handed adisappointingloss by an extremely talented Duxbury team 3-2. The Skippers were competitive throughout the match, and thus showed that Cohasset is a tough team to be reckoned with and one that will not lose easily.

Rich Reddick at First Singles played an outstanding match and came away with a victory. Derick Lacks and Steven Meyers also won for Cohasset.

This week the boys face Whitman/Hanson on Wednesday and a strong Scituate team on Thursday. Hopefully, the boys will be able to bounce back from the Duxbury loss and get back on the winning track.

BASEBALL

Monday, the boys let a 2-0 lead in the seventh inning slip through their hands and ended up losing to Norwell 6-3. Unfortunately, in the seventh inning Norwell tied up the game and went on to drive in 4 runs in the eighth inning, while Cohasset was only able to answer with one.

However, Cohasset did play a good game overall and was led offensively by Jamie Roy who went 4 for 4. Todd Fitzpatrick, David Shultz, and Bobby Shultz each picked up a hit as well as a RBI.

Defensively, pitcher Sean Corkery had a solid game striking out 2 batters and lasting the entire game.

Wednesday, the boys hung onto a 4-0 lead and eventually ended up beating Middleboro 4-3. Cohasset became a little nervous when Middleboro closed within one, but the boys were able to keep their cool and squeeze out the victory.

Winning pitcher Tom Larson went the entire game and had a strong game on the mound. Bobby Shultz and Jamie Roy both played well defensively as well.

Bobby Shultz, Peter Sandbloom, Todd Henry, and Glen Bernstein each had a hit to lead Cohasset up at bat.

Friday, the boys again pulled out another close game as they beat Duxbury 2-1. All the scoring was done in the first two innings, and thus, the key to this victory was Cohasset's solid defense and Sean Corkery's outstanding pitching. Sean had a great day fanning 5 batters and allowing only 4 hits.

Bobby Shultz, Jamie Roy, Glen Bernstein, and Todd Henry each had a hit; but Todd's hit was the most important of the day. In the second inning when Cohasset was down 1-0, Todd belted a home run with a man on base, and thus, gave Cohasset its tying and winning runs.

This week the boys are home against Whitman-Hanson Wednesday. Thursday, the Skippers will travel to Scituate and take on the infamous Sailors.

GIRLS' TRACK

Tuesday, the girls lost to Sandwich. Coach Clare Brady felt the score of this meet should have been closer but unfortunately Cohasset overall just had a bad day.

Jen Coley led the team with a first and two seconds followed by Caitlin Staunton who placed first, second, and third, and Liz O'Leary who picked up a first and a second. Nancy Riley and Maureen Long each picked up a first place as well. Jen Plante had a second and Michelle Hartley finished third in her event to complete the list of Cohasset's place finishers.

Thursday, the girls lost a close meet to Rockland. Brady felt her team did very well in sweeping the running events, unfortunately, Rockland was stronger in the field events.

Jen Coley had a great day finishing first in all four of her events. One of her victories came in the 330 hurdles in which she broke her own previously set school record.

Liz O'Leary had 2 firsts and a second, while Caitlin Staunton had two firsts. Nancy Riley and Anne O' Leary each had a second. Michelle Hartley and Laurel Collins picked up two third places a piece. Third places also went ot Jen Plante, Julie Bowdoin, Kerri Anglin, Dawn Fitzgerald, and Maureen Long.

BOYS' TRACK

The boys had a disapppointing week losing a close meet to Sandwich Tuesday 84-61 and being beaten soundly by the strongest team in the league, Rockland on Thursday.

Tuesday, Coach Jon Anderson feels his team could have won, but he was still pleased with Cohasset's effort.

John Hall had a great day placing first in all four of his events. Mike Smith and Eric Wagner each had a first and two seconds. Jim Reidy had two seconds and Ian Smart and Kevin Dunn picked up seconds as well. Joel Reidy had two thirds, while Mike Greiner, Kostas Roukanakis, Rich McLaughlin, Ned Chase, Ray Rosano, and Pete Buckley each had a third place.

This week the boys face East Bridgewater on Monday which should be quite a challenge for Cohasset. Thursday, Cohasset has a shot against beating Middleboro.

GIRLS' SOFTBALL

The girls had a tough week losing all three of their games and starting off by losing to Norwell on Monday 15-4. The Skippers played pretty well but Norwell pounded the ball and Cohasset was never able to get into the game. Toni Cann, Kristin Ellinger, Margie Murphy, Susan Riley, Sarah Bishop, and Leslie McGee each picked up a hit with Toni, Kristen, and Leslie each picking up an RBI.

Tuesday the girls lost to Duxbury 21-8. The Skippers were able to close in within one in the fourth inning, but unfortunately were unable to hang on.

Kara Mannion, Debbie Hartley, Lisa Shumaker, and Susan Riley each had a hit. Kristen Ellinger, Lisa Shumaker, and Debbie Hartley each batted in hitters, the rest of Cohasset's runs coming from heads up base running.

Jennifer Chapman

Thursday the girls suffered a disappointing loss to Middleboro. Cohasset was close throughout the entire game, but were unable to hang on in the end. Lisa Shumaker, Margie Murphy, Toni Cann, Kristen Ellinger, and Leslie McGee each picked up a hit.

This week the girls travel to South Boston on Tuesday and Whitman/Hanson on Wednesday. Thursday, the girls take on Scituate.

Elisabethan Companies present 'The Rivals'

"When he goes off on his break, I always know he'll come back with something. That's because he's a pro," says director Judy Holmes of actor, Michael Fennimore, playing Jack Absolute in the Elizabethan Companie's forthcoming production of Sheridan's classic comedy, "The Rivals".

And, pro he is. A graduate of the American Academy of Dramatic Arts and member of the Screen Actors Guild, Michael Fennimore has "done" the dinner theatre circuit in Alabama, Virginia and Ohio and has appeared in such films as "Mean Streets", with Robert Deniro, "Whose Life is it Anyway?, "The Verdict", with Paul Newman and most recently in the first episode of Boston's "Spenser for Hire", portraying fireman John Calahan.

Fennimore tap danced his way into the theatre at the age of five—a year later auditioning for the Perry Como Show; later he played Sleepy in "The Seven Dwarfs", using the tail of his Davy Crocket hat for a beard. But, it was not until 10th grade that his love affair with the stage fully bloomed—with the role of Dolittle in "My Fair Lady". In 1979, he went on to win (in Beckett)the N.E.T.C. award for best supporting actor in all of New England.

Four years ago, Fennimore joined Hingham's Elizabethan Companie, as Troanio in "Twelfth Night". "It's a great opportunity—working with Judy Holmes. She demands the most of me; won't accept less than what I am able to do. And, working on the stages greases my 'acting vehicle', which, of course, is good for auditions for the professional stage,"

Fennimore feels that classical theatre is invaluable, particularly in these times: "We are bombarded with such inferior material on T.V.—stuff that is rude, crude and treated only for shock value—that we need and deserve something more. Classical theatre stretches the mind, uses the imagination. This is language that one is not accustomed to—a lost language, if you will—one that has to be relearned. It is both educational and fun and any actor away from classical theatre for long, will find it hard to get back into."

And yet, Fennimore is surprised how thoroughly contemporary "The Rivals" is. "It stands up well—no, better—than any play in its period. In fact, "The Rivals" should be required reading in any acting school."

His role in the Elizabethan Companie's "Rivals" is Jack Absolute, the romantic lead. "I haven't made up my mind as to whether or not I like him," Fennimore confesses. "Jack is fun, cynical, but I'm not sure that Lydia should end up with him: he is such a conniver. But, everybody else likes him so that I'm sure by the end of the rehearsal period, I will, too."

For Fennimore, doing "The Rivals" is a treat: "After films, I love getting back into acting: building character, learning lines, revelling in the spontaneity of an audience. Why, "he smiles," during my most recent auditon for a New York casting director, I felt that my acting skills had been honed, even by just this practice."

Asked about the Companie's cast of the "Rivals", Fennimore says, "I love 'em! I'm learning something from every single one of them on stage!"

Besides performing, Fennimore manages the Bull and Finch (a pub in Boston) which, actually, serves as the base for the television show, "Cheers". Also, he prepares training films for companies such as John Hancock, I.B.M., Digital...he works on cable stations, the Manhattan Theatre Club and has spent two seasons with the Boston Public Theatre.

Michael Fennimore lives in Weymouth Heights with his wife and two small children.

"The Rivals" is directed by Judy Holmes and produced by Judy Hardy, one of the original founders (with John Holmes) of the Elizabethan Companie, then called the Elizabethan Companie of Waytes and Players. A musician of considerable note, Hardy will also act as the show's music director.

"The Rivals" will be performed at Wilder Memorial Hall in May: 16th, 17th and 23rd and 24th. Curtain: 8 p.m.

Tickets are $6 and are available at the Hingham Square Bookshop, the Hingham Library or call: 545-7046 (after 3 p.m.)

Golden proposes additional revenue plan

State Sen. William Golden of Weymouth on behalf of the Joint Committee on Counties, has proposed legislation designed to provide additional revenue sources for Massachusetts counties.

The Regional Revitalization Act would divert the entire stamp act — $2.28 per $1,000 of purchase price on the sale of real estate — from the state to the counties. The proposal would require that 35 percent of the funds generated be dedicated to the county correctional facilities budget, and that 10 percent be dedicated to registry of deeds operation.

The measure would allow each county to decide on appropriate levels of funding for its facilities, and also for new regional programs such as groundwater protection, solid waste, planning and other programs.

Funds would also act as a reimbursement for losses in federal revenue sharing funds, which could amount to millions of dollars to counties over the next fiscal year.

Control of the funds would be placed with county advisory boards, which means up to 55 percent of the funds could be returned to cities and towns within the county if not expended for county programs. This proposed legislation would not apply to Suffolk County, since funds are already transferred annually to the city of Boston as the result of the Tregor Bill.

Liability speaker

State Sen. William Golden of Weymouth will be a featured speaker on "The Crisis In Municipal Liability Insurance" at a conference Tuesday, May 13, in Washington, D.C.

The scoop on Souppes

Last month, Paul Narkewitz, foreign language teacher at Cohasset High School, received a large packet containing forty letters from the young people of Souppes-sur-Loing, Cohasset's Sister City.

Narkowitz distributed the packet to Cohasset students who expressed interest in establishing communications with their peers in Souppes. Since then, several letters have travelled back and forth, filled with promises of friendship and photographs of families, friends, and pets.

"This is a wonderful way to begin buiding a relationship between our two towns," Narkewitz commented. "The kids in both Souppes and Cohasset are very excited about what they are doing and the friends they are making abroad. The best part of the program is that children of all ages are involved and they in turn are getting their families enthusiastic."

In a recent visit to France with Cohasset High School, Narkewitz took the opportunity to visit Souppes and the high school there. "The kids there had hundreds of questions about Cohasset, the United States, our government, our way of life. My only regret was that I couldn't stay longer. Souppes is a lovely small community, ideally situated ninety kilometers south of Paris, with the Loire Valley just to the east. The people are warm and gracious, their gardens exquisite, and of course, the food was divine!"

Several families in Souppes indicated to Narkewitz their homes were open to anyone from Cohasset who would like to visit.

He has given the names of Souppes host families to the Cultural Exchange Committee which is currently putting together profiles of young people and families in the hope of making some matches as early as this summer. Packets of information are now available to anyone who is interested in becoming a part of the exchange program, either as a host or as a visitor. To receive information, call Judy Keim, 383-1026; Elizabeth Warren, 383-0336; or Marylou Lawrence, 383-6776.

In August, 1984, Cohasset Selectmen officially proclaimed kinship with the small French village, Souppes-sur-Loing. The bond was suggested by Cohasset resident Thomas Churchill, who led the 8th Tank Battalion in liberating Souppes during World War II.

According to Keim, chairman of the Cultural Exchange committee, "The committee is very busy planning town-wide activities to celebrate Mayor Prudhomme's arrival next month. Our local businesses and organizations have been most generous in offering their time and services to help make the occasion eventful for both Cohasset and her visitors. This first visit is a vital step in building a meaningful relationship between our two towns and the committee is hopeful that all townspeople will participate.

"We are very encouraged with the overwhelmingly enthusiastic response we have had from Cohasset families who either want to host Souppes visitors or travel over there — and some who want to do both."

said, prior to the combined meeting with the school committee.

Plante said DMH requested the local housing authority set aside eight housing units specifically for retarded adult residents.

"We've looked for a suitable place for an I.C.F./M.R. facility in Cohasset for two years without success. This looks like our best hope. I talked the other day with the DMH commissioner and she was very excited about this proposal," Plante said.

Housing authority chairman Muncey said Ted Lang, area director of DMH, was scheduled to attend the May 7 meeting. He will assist the authority in completing an application to the state for grant money for the construction of the low income housing.

"We haven't sent in the application yet," Muncey said Tuesday night. "Hopefully after the meeting Wednesday, we will have all the signatures and we will be all set to send it into the state."

According to Muncey, the school property which accesses onto Pleasant Street, "is the most suitable land we could find for this housing project.

"I went to the assessor's office and pored over all the maps and looked at all the town-owned land. Most of the land is owned by the water department, the conservation commission, or is taken by the town dump, or the gravel pit. Some of the properties are too small. But this was the best site. I can't really say how much land we need, but I think 20 acres would be reasonable," he noted.

The proposal, he said, will include low income housing with eight units set aside for mentally retarded adults. That is the maximum number of units allowed at one site, according to DMH guidelines, Muncey explained. The residents would be supervised 24 hours a day by DMH staff members.

The state agency, assisted by Plante, have searched two years to find a suitable location for an intermediate care facility for retarded adults. Although a site was originally located off Crocker Lane, the state later determined it was too close to Rte. 3A and therefore posed a safety hazard for the adult residents.

Since that rejection, Plante and DMH officials have searched throughout the town for other locations.

"I really think there's no alternative to this site," Plante said this week. "I think this is the best choice we could find."

CHS career lecture series

As part of the Career Education Program at Cohasset Junior/Senior High School, the PSO and the CHS Guidance Department have initiated a Guest Speaker Program for the second year through the academic departments. The purpose of this program is to expose students to a variety of job/careers possibilities available to them.

The speakers, who are mostly local residents, address a class in the academic area which closely relates the skills necessary for that career. In this way, students may begin to understand the importance of their subjects as the foundation for successful careers.

The following is the kind of information the speakers are asked to relate to the students:

1. A description of the job, the working conditions and the present range of salaries;

2. The educational and/or technical training required to be successful in the field that is being described;

3. A description of how the speaker reached his/her present position. An outline of what a student must do to obtain a similar position;

4. The prospects of opening in the particular field over the next five to ten (5-10) years;

5. The personal qualities or character traits which help an individual to be successful in occupation.

The speakers usually bring a handout, chart, graph or audio/visual aid which may help the student to have a better understanding of the career being presented. The "aid" can help the students to stay focused on the topic and thus, be able to relate being presented. The "aid" can help the students to stay focused on the topic and thus, be able to relate to the career more easily.

Additionally, students who study with Dr. John Packard in the Audio-Visual Department, videotape the presentation for use in the classroom.

Linda Starmer and Cynthia Hurley, PSO representatives for the Senior High School, have been instrumental in recruiting speakers for this program.

To date the following Science Career speakers have been scheduled: Ms. Peggy Tobin, The Talbots, Computer Aided Design; Ms. Mary Whalen, Draper Laboratory, Software Specialist for N.A.S.A.; Ms. Nancy Johnson, Harvard Ph.D. Candidate in Genetic Engineering; Ms. Alice Heller, Political Canvasser, Clean Water Action Committee; Ms. Kathryn Walsh, Jordan Hospital, Nuclear Medical Technologist; Mr. James Kirk, Ocean Spray Cranberry Company, Biochemist.

English Class Career Speakers are as follows: Mrs. Kathy Jarvis, Speech Pathologist, writer of childrens' books; Richard Hayes, Chief Librarian, Paul Pratt Library; David Mehegan, Journalist, Boston Globe; James Shumaker, Lawyer; Richard Henderson, Lawyer, Town Counsel Cohasset; Jeffrey Rhind, Program Director, Cohasset Community Television; William Becker, Delta Airline Pilot; Edmund A. Steinle, Vice president for Clinical Operations at New England Baptist Hospital.

Students, teachers and parents are all enthusiastic about the Career Lecture Series and hope it will continue each year.

For more information on this very worthwhile project, contact the CHS Guidance office at 383-6102.

A Lesson in mortality

Dale, 2, of the Joseph Osgood School second-grade classroom of teacher Rose Collins, passed away Tuesday, April 29 in his cage. Dale was a gerbil, a gift of the David Leahy family to Mrs. Collins' class last year.

"Some of the children were upset, but seemed to feel better after a solemn funeral ceremony in the Osgood playground," said Mrs. Collins. The second graders have been caring for Dale and his life-long companion, Chip, since September. They have fed the gerbils and cleaned their cage with zeal. "Now the children are concerned for Chip's loneliness," said Mrs. Collins "but, I told them that maybe Chip needs a period of mourning before having a new roommate."

Rest in peace, Dale.

They walked 10 miles (in the pouring rain) to raise money for the Protestant Social Service Bureau, which is a church-sponsored agency serving people of all faiths. It carries on programs in marriage and family counseling, foster care and is an adoption agency serving all southeastern Massachusetts.

These young people undertook this walk as part of their 20-hour community service requirement for the Coming of Age Program. SPONSORS ARE NEEDED to support them in their generous and exhausting effort.

Call the church office to indicate a donation ($1.00 per mile would be terrific!) for one or all of the walkers.

The South Shore's Choice for Quality Garden Products

Marshfield vote will be felt in local landfills

By Don Merrill
Mariner Staff

A decision last week by voters in Marshfield town meeting to restrict landfill uses could have a far-reaching effect on solid-waste planning throughout the South Shore.

Voters approved Article 39 with seven amendments that would prohibit landfills within 3,500 feet of wells and aquifers and limit the types of debris that commercial landfills may accept.

The proposal "will have a bearing on regional solid-waste planning on the South Shore," said Judy Wiegand, waste planner for the Metropolitan Area Planning Council.

Other South Shore towns might have been unwilling to include Marshfield in any plans if the article was approved as originally written, Duxbury highway Supt. Gilbert Burns said.

The comments were made at a meeting in Marshfield last Tuesday of the South Shore Coalition's solid-waste study subcommittee. It is meeting on a bimonthly basis to plan for a solution to dwindling landfill space.

Major alternatives include a regional landfill or resource recovery, which would combine recycling and conversion of remaining trash to energy, fiberboard or other products.

Wide participation is important because any proposal "could be down the drain in six months" without it, said Hanover Health Agent Richard Simmons.

Wiegand told committee members that South Shore towns may be in a "slightly better position" than other regions in terms of available landfill space, but she indicated it's a mistake to become complacent about disposal issues.

"It takes years and years to plan a regional facility, so we cannot sit back and wait too much longer."

Among the coalition's member communitites, Marshfield and Scituate have the greatest remaining capacity, with scheduled closure dates of 1998 and 2000 respectively.

Marshfield public works Supt. Leonard Landry cited the SEMASS trash-to-energy plant now under construction in Rochester as an example of how long it takes to plan a facility.

"It was first proposed in 1978 with a scheduled opening date of 1982," he said.

Changing political attitudes and the number of alternative proposals are part of the reason it takes so long to plan a facility, Landry added.

The committee agreed to contact selectmen in the 10 member towns for a vote of support indicating each town's interest in joining the study for a facility.

"It's a vote to indicate interest in the planning stage, but it's not a commitment of funds," said coalition project manager Jean Christensen of Marshfield.

Armed with the support of town executives, the committee plans to approach 1987 annual town meetings for a "vote of confidence" in planning a regional facility. The study group will then compile a general proposal once it knows which communities will participate in the planning phase.

"The town meetings are a year away, but you're really talking about eight months because of warrant closings," Wiegand said.

Rep. Murray chosen for security forum

Representative Mary Jeanette Murray (R-Cohasset) has been chosen by Secretary of the Air Force Russell A. Rourke to participate in the 33rd Annual Air War College National Security Forum at Maxwell Air Force Base, Alabama.

Representative Murray was one of only 100 invitees selected from some 3,600 applicants nation-wide to attend the sessions which will be held from May 11 through May 16.

A former member of the United States Marine Corps, Representative Murray said she was "very pleased and very proud" to be selected for the National Security Forum. The composition of the participants includes, according to the Air Force, "citizens who have achieved much in many fields of American life and endeavor. Each person represents 'the best' in our richly diverse society."

The primary objective of the Forum is a frank and candid exchange of views on national security matters.

"The discussions and debates and presentations are fair and balanced and wide-open," Representative Murray said. "All points of view are represented, from those of the proponents of disarmament to those who advocate a strong offensive and defensive capability."

"America has thrived because it is a nation in which every point of view is able to be expressed and every position open for debate," she said. "And, reflecting that American passion for open discussion and open ideas, the Security Forum has flourished for more than three decades."

The Forum members will participate in discussions and programs with the 225 military officers from the grade of Colonel up, who constitute the 'class' at the Air War College. These officers represent more than a dozen foreign nations, as well as the U.S.

Representative Murray will attend the session at her own expense.

Center gears up for busy Senior Center week

like to organize a men's morning where the men could come to the center for two or three hours, bring their lunch and have an opportunity to play cards, cribbage, bowl and talk with other men. I've had a few men ask for such a program. And a few women, whose husbands have health problems, have discussed the idea with me. They'd like a gathering spot for the husbands to sit and talk with other men."

Another project Bryanton envisions for the young center is a telephone reassurance program. Volunteers from the center would make calls to homebound senior residents, inquiring about their health and their daily lives. If someone has recently returned from the hospital, the volunteer would check in and make sure all his needs are being met. "I'd love to start this program in the fall. All I would need are the volunteers to make the calls," she said, "I think this program is needed. We need to show these people we care about them."

The director noted many people are still unaware of the center and the services it provides. "People don't really know what to expect at the center," she said. "I think they're pleasantly surprised."

Younger senior citizens, those in the 60's are volunteer staff members at the center. The older seniors are the participants. "People when they are healthy and can get out, see the center as a place to participate in a program such as the exercise class. The homebound resident sees us as a referral center, a contact with the community," she added.

The most widely-used service is the Council on Aging's senior shuttle bus. Coordinated by Ray Remick, the shuttle is powered by a staff of volunteer drivers. They now offer Sunday rides to local church services, as well as weekday shuttles to stores and in-town appointments.

In conjunction with senior center week, the Board of Health, Social Service League and the Council on Aging are sponsoring a Health Fair May 26 at the First Parish Meeting House. The program is designed for residents of all ages. Screenings for the eyes, blood, podiatry testing, oral health care and hearing will be provided at the fair by a number of local physicians.

"We want to make people aware of the health services provided within their own community," Bryanton said. "At the same time we can provide people with information about homemaker services, hospices and a lot of preventative information."

The director said the past five months have been enriching for her and the hundreds of residents who have joined the classes lectures and special programs offered through the winter.

"I'm very pleased with the progress at the center," she continued. "I think it will take the whole year to evaluate the progress. But as a whole, I think the center is going according to the council's expectations."

The Council on Aging members, all appointed by selectmen, include the following: Chairman, Rev. John Keohane, Dorothea Bjorkgren, George Fallon, Helen Barbary, Mary Donovan, Katherine McGrath, Tony Finegan, Gerard Keating, Betty Enders, Charlotte Leland, Edward Mulvey. Helen Hooper is the council's liason with the Social Service League, Sheila Kelly is the 60 + Club liason, and Alice Daunt is the liason with South Shore Elder Services.

Local historical treasure found here in village

By John Magadieu
Mariner Staff

"It's the best kept secret on the South Shore."

Although 700 people this year may visit the Captain John Wilson House and The Maritime Museum on Elm Street, David Wadsworth, of the Cohasset Historical Society, said he sees these gems in the crown of Cohasset center as largely local treasures.

The Wilson House, an old sea captain's home, was built by David Nichols in 1810 and sold to Captain John Wilson.

Wilson, an active mariner in the War of 1812 as wel' as in commercial ventures, married Hepsibah Kilby of Cohasset.

Together they raised 10 children there and the captain operated a ship's chandlery on the first floor of the house.

Wadsworth explained, "The first floor is a little different from most old houses. You don't see the big kitchen fireplace for cooking. You'll see that upstairs.

"That's a highlight too," he added. "Because Captain Wilson ran a small store here on the first floor, the living quarters were upstairs."

Captain Wilson died in July, 1861 and his wife followed nearly six years later.

But the house remained in the family for a couple of generations, until Charles Wilson and Sarah Wilson Linley deeded the place to William McGaw in 1912.

According to Wadsworth, the house was quite run-down in 1912 and McGaw did a nice job of patching it back together.

McGaw, who owned the hardware store across the street, used the house as a commercial building until 1936, when he gave it to the historical society in memory of his wife.

Through those years, the building housed a variety of businesses, including: an ice cream parlor; a tea room; a photographer's studio and Monteiro's Tailor's Shop.

In 1936, the Captain John Wilson House became the first headquarters and first museum for the historical society.

"What we see in it today," Wadsworth explained, "is mainly a selection of 19th century furnishings and furniture from other old houses in Cohasset, not from this one itself."

He pointed out a number of interesting artifacts.

"This high-backed settle bench is rather unusual," he said, pointing to a black bench in a corner of the downstairs room. "They would swing it in front of the fireplace in the winter to keep the cold drafts off.

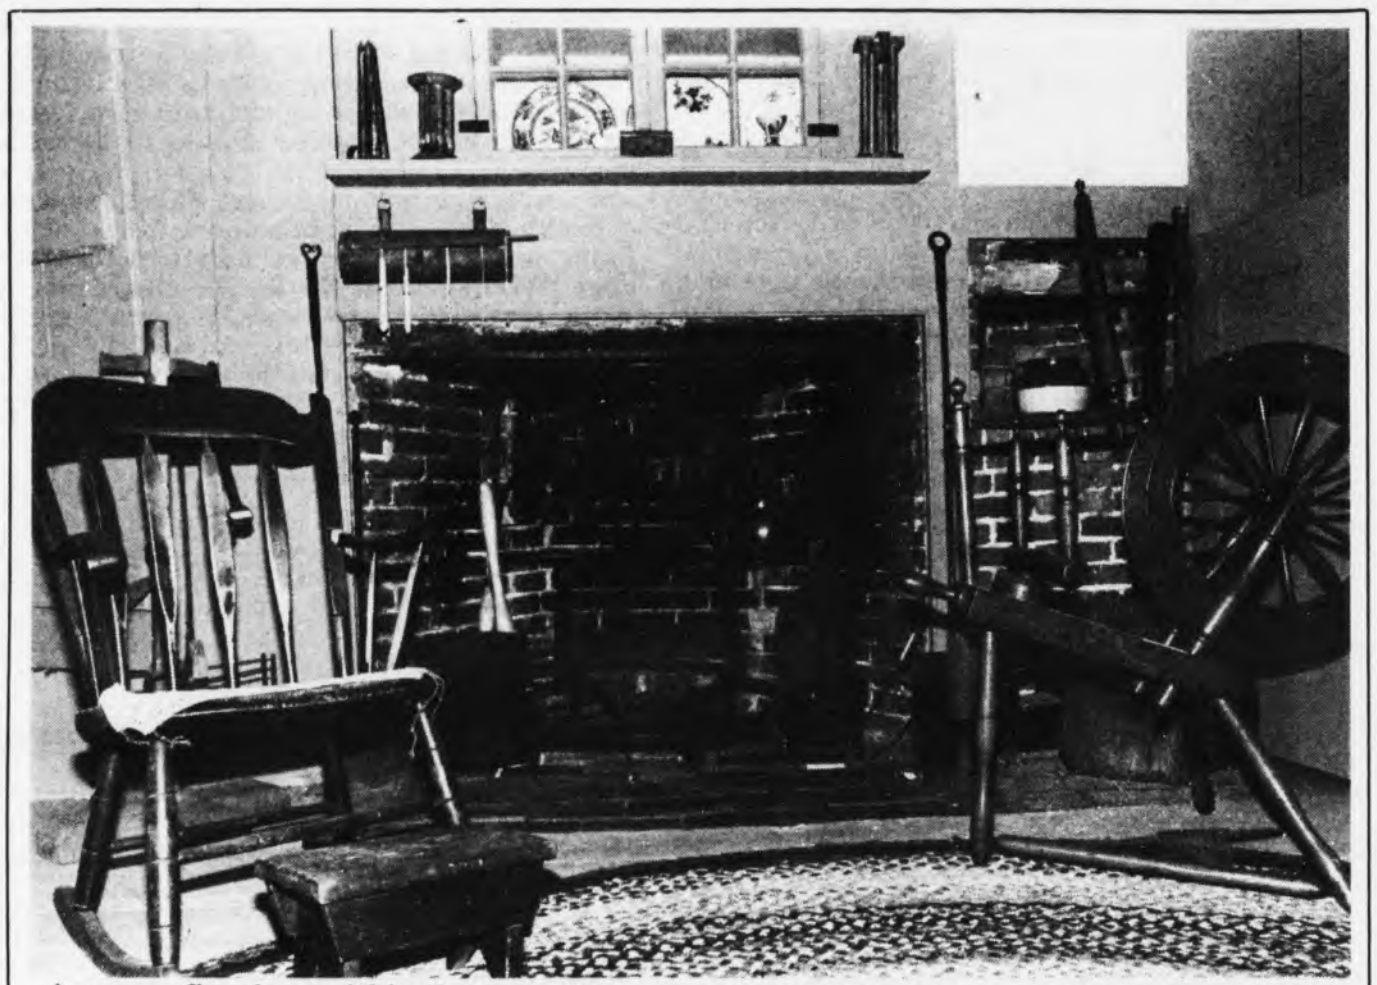
"What is unusual," he said, "is that it has a little folding shelf attached to it."

Besides furniture, the Wilson house also has a number of artworks.

"The artwork is mostly local in origin," Wadsworth explained, "and it mostly deals with local subjects.

"The collection includes a painting by the best known local painter of what are now historical subjects. Frank Shapliegh was a well-known painter in the late 19th century.

"He lived in New Hampshire," Wadsworth added, "and he painted mainly in the White Mountains.



A corner fireplace within the John Wilson house on Elm Street. (John Magadieu)

But his wife was from Cohasset, so he did some painting here too."

Wadsworth pointed out a unique corner grandfather clock, which was built by Samuel Bates, who lived across the street in a house he built in 1811.

There are many other beautiful antiques and old stories to go with them at the Captain John Wilson House.

The Maritime Museum, next door is equally enlightening.

"The Maritime Museum was actually built earlier (than the Wilson House)," Wadsworth explained. "It was moved next door to the Wilson House from its original location on Border Street at Cohasset Harbor, across from the Old Salt House.

"Those buildings," he added, "were part of the Bates family fishing business, associated with the Bates Wharf. That building was the Bates' ship chandlery, a marine supply building for their fishing fleet."

Wadsworth said the building was moved next door to the Wilson House in the 1950s when it was given to the historical society.

These buildings will be open between mid-June through the end of September, although David Wadsworth will give his annual spring tour May 16.

"I'd like to see a few more people come through," he said; "that would be nice. On the other hand however, I wouldn't want to see Cohasset turn into a tourist town."

So despite the fact these two jewels in Cohasset's crown are listed in the National Historic Register, the Captain John Wilson House and The Maritime Museum will most likely remain the best kept secret on the South Shore.

We all feel that Lillian is a great asset to the Conway Company and without her I'm sure we wouldn't have come this far."*

Meeting Cohasset's new postmaster

By John Magadieu
Mariner Staff

Cohasset has a new postmaster at the reins. James Hooley was officially installed Friday, May 2.

He has been here for five weeks. "I'm just beginning to find out a little about the town," he said. "Coming into a new office, you have to learn all the employees and the businesses in town that require the most amount of attention."

Now, it's official. Hooley is postmaster.

"I am extremely pleased and honored to be in this position," he said. "It's something that I've worked for for a long time."

Hooley added, "It's a goal that I secretly held, not ever really knowing whether I'd be able to attain it or not. But I never gave up my quest for it."

Hooley said he is looking forward to working with his new "postal family."

Hooley has years of experience and training coming into his new position at Cohasset.

He began his postal career as a clerk in Wellesley Hills in 1967. He continued as a clerk in Chestnut Hill.

In 1977, he was promoted to supervisor of mails and delivery and later, superintendent in Brighton. Then he became manager of the Waban post office.

Before his appointment as Cohasset postmaster, Hooley served as manager of the Needham post office.

"Jim took on increasing responsibility and numerous managerial details at postal facilities in the Boston area," said William Grimes, Director of Customer Services at Boston.

Grimes was the master of ceremonies at Hooley's inauguration Friday.

'It's a goal that I secretly held, not ever really knowing whether I'd be able to attain it or not. But I never gave up my quest for it.'

"In 1971," Grimes explained, "the postal reorganization act took the position of postmaster out of the political realm and allowed career employees the opportunity to aspire to these higher level positions.

"Such is the case with your new postmaster, Jim Hooley," he added.

Hooley was sworn in by Philip Sullivan, Boston Postmaster. "Jim takes over the responsibility for Cohasset here," he explained, "just as we undertake a further restructuring of our organization to improve overall service.

"I think with the appointment of Jim Hooley," he added, "that you are getting an individual who reflects exactly the type and caliber of person that is needed to manage a post office today."

Hooley said the position of Cohasset Postmaster was especially alluring because he is a boating enthusiast.

"I always wanted to get to work and live in a town that's on the water," he said. "I love the ocean; it was a factor in my picking this town and applying for the job here."

Finally, Hooley extended an invitation.

"I'd like to open an invitation," he said, "to anyone in town who has any problems to feel free to call upon me at any time."

Three artists exhibit work at Art Center

Artists Janet Williamson, Don Lettis and Gil Coyle come together for a three-person exhibit at the South Shore Art Center, 103 Ripley Road in Cohasset, during the month of May. The opening reception for these artists is Friday, May 2, from 6:30 to 8:30 p.m.

One exhibit will be Gil Coyle's mixed interpretation of cows, Don Lettis' monoprints and etchings both abstract and non-objective, and Janet Williamson's abstracts of nature unexplained. The exhibit will continue through May 31.

Coyle who works with drawings, monotypes, mixed media and paints, has done a series on the theme of a cow. She has been commissioned by a farm in Maine to do a cow decoy for a person who likes to look at cows but not have the work of raising cows. The cow decoy, measuring 4 ft. by 5 ft. and very portable, will be placed in the fields to attract neighboring cows to come for a visit. Coyle has painted one side of the cow realistically and the other side more abstract.

Williamson describes her work as an "attempt through line and color to record the raw emotional response. It is a cooperation between mind and hand to present human interactions with other humans and with the events that surround them," she says of her work for this exhibit. Her work has been included in the Duxbury Winter Juried Show, the South Shore Art Center's Blue Ribbon exhibits, the Scituate Art Association Festival and the South Shore Summer Festival.

Don Lettis is the academic dean of the Massachusetts College of Art and a member of the Board of Directors of the South Shore Art Center serving as vice president for two years and acting president in 1972. He has been co-chairman of the Center's summer festival.

The works of these three artists together should create a most interesting exhibit in the invitational gallery of the Center.

The public is invited to view the exhibit Monday through Friday, noon to 4 p.m., and Saturday, 10 a.m. to 1 p.m. For further information, call the South Shore Art Center, 383-9548.

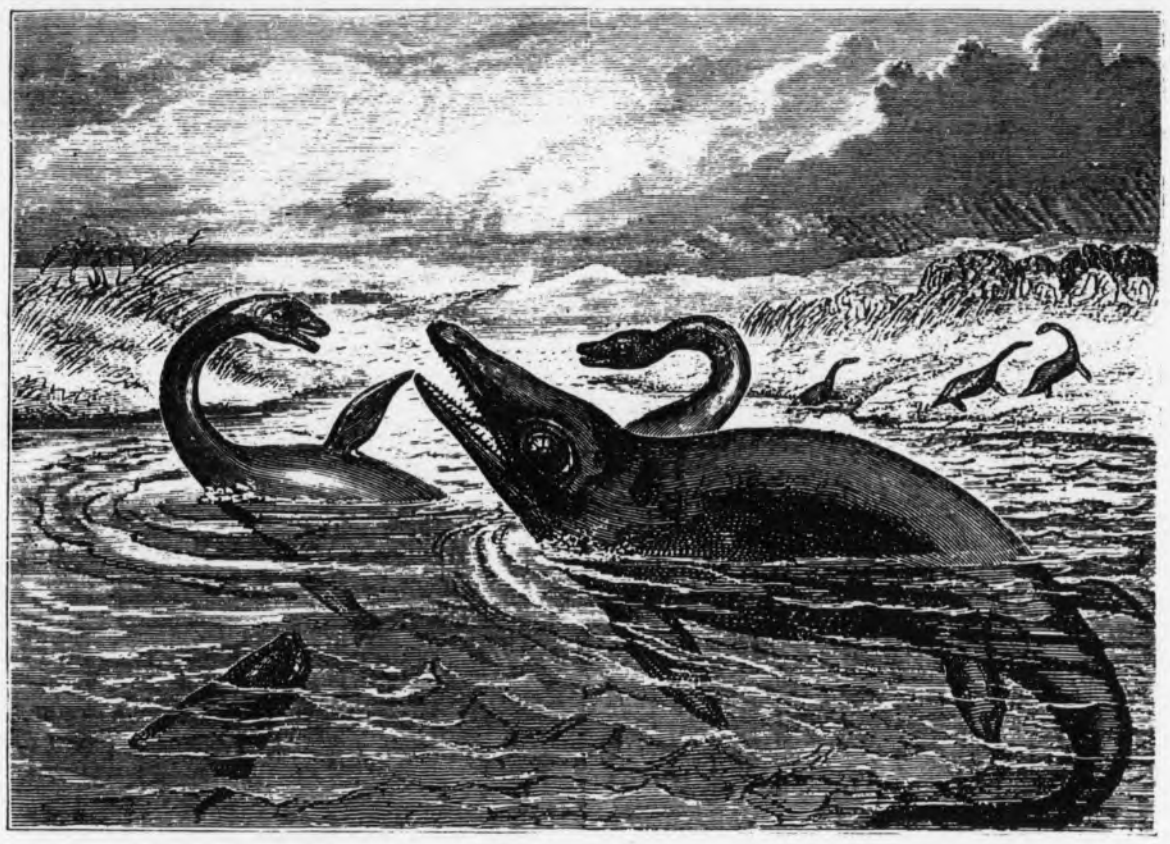
Life & times of the dinosaur at the Audubon Center



Dinosaurs, which mean terrible lizards, populated the earth 150 million years ago.

What they looked like, how they lived and what made them disappear will be some of the questions discussed at an illustrated ("The Life and Times of the dinosaur") lecture May 15 at 7:30 p.m. at the Mass. Audubon's South Shore Regional office, 2000 Main St., Marshfield.

Ranging from the immense "ultasauras" unearthed in Texas to the sparrow-sized dinosaurs recently discovered in Canada, dinosaurs are considered even more fascinating than when they were first described more than a century ago.

Although they were superbly adapted to their environments, they may have been victims of a cosmic catastrophe that befell the planet 65 million years ago.

In this, the year of Halley's Comet, the legacy of the dinosaurs may teach us about the earth's future.

A fee of $3 for adult members and $4 for non-members will be charged. Children will be admitted for $1, or $2 for non-members.

Other events include the fourth annual birdcarving exhibition at the Massachusetts Audubon Society Saturday, May 17, from 9 a.m. to 5 p.m. and Sunday May 18 from noon to 5 p.m. Admission is $2 for members and $3 for non-members. Thirty carvers will be represented from the South Shore, Cape Cod, Rhode Island and Connecticut.

The birding event of the year also will be held that weekend! The 24-hour bird-a-thon will be from 6 p.m. Friday, May 16 to 6 p.m. Saturday, May 17. Call 837-9400 for more information.

Friday morning bird walks: $2 members, $3 non-members. May 9, Ferry Hill thicket & Webster Farm; May 16, Greenbush and Third Cliff; May 23, the Glades; May 30, Webster Farm.

Wildflower walks: $2 members, $3 non-members. May 20, Black Pond Preserve; May 24, North Hill Marsh; May 27, Webster Farm.

Duxbury Beach walk Saturday, May 10, spend a morning with the Duxbury conservation forman Joe Grady on the beach from 9 a.m. to noon. Meet at Duxbury Beach bath house. $2 members, $3 non-members.

Poison ivy! Stinging nettles! May 13 at 10 a.m. $2 members, $3 non-members. Take a closer look at plants as they leaf out in spring. Become familiar with common poisonous and non-poisonous plants by learning to look at leaves and their many variations.

Explore the Green Harbor River May 14, 9 a.m. to 1 p.m. There is no better way to get the feel of a tidal river and learn more about it than by being on it and exploring the edges at Daniel Webster Farm $6 members, $8 non-members. Limit 8.

All programs meet at the South Shore Sanctuary office unless otherwise noted. Everyone should preregister at least five days in advance by calling 837-9400.

Fourth annual bird carving exhibit May 17

Massachusetts Audubon's South Shore Regional Center in Marshfield will host its fourth annual bird carving exhibition on May 17 from 10 a.m. to 5 p.m. and May 18 from noon to 5 p.m.

More than 30 New England carvers will display decoys and decorative carvings of shore, song, and game birds as well as dramatic carvings of birds of prey such as owls.

The South Shore Bird Carving Exhibition is rapidly becoming a major show for New England carvers, many of whom return annually for this special event. Some of the participants are recognized nationally, having received awards at events such as the National Decoy Carving Competition, the Canadian National Exhibition, and the Ward Foundation World Championship.

Hanover bird carver Bob Titus, with five years of active bird carving experience, presently has the state bird, the chickadee, on display in the State house. A ribbon winner at the national level, Ellen Nelson of Marshfield will display her works specialized in life-size and miniature song and shorebirds.

The exhibition will take place in the Killam-Rodgers House, a Victorian home recently converted to the South Shore Regional Center overlooking 150 acres of sanctuary land near the mouth of the North River. Visitors are welcome to walk the riverside boardwalk trail and explore the sanctuary.

During the exhibition, carvings will be available for purchase as well as natural history books and literature specific to the field of bird carving.

The exciting schedule of events will include: "The Sun in My Hand," by Michael Videtta; "Close-up Photography the Easy Way," by Arnold J. Kaplan; "Tricks, Tips and Gadgets, Part II" by W. Ernest Holmes, "The Four Points of a Quality Photograph," by Jacob Mosser III; "Mastering Electronic Flash," by George W. Price, Jr.; "a Cook's Tour of Britain," by Harold W. Simms.

As can be seen, the all-day program has a lot to offer everyone and promises to be one of the best photographic outings on the South Shore in many a year.

Early reservations are required if you purchase the optional hot and cold buffet for $4. Fee for the educational program is $12 for members and $15 for non-members. Mail all registrations to Dorothy Snowdon, 159 High Street, Hingham, 02043.

NEARLY NATIVE — by DARRELL BERGER

Sinister learnings are not always evil

I hit a ground ball to the shortstop. He bobbled it briefly, picked it up and threw to first. I was safe by an eyelash, not because of my speed, but because I am lefthanded.

Being lefthanded means I'm a step or two closer to first when I bat. Baseball, like many sports, gives an advantage to lefthandedness. Few aspects of life do.

Lefthanded pitchers have an advantage because of their rarity. The angle of their deliveries is harder to gauge. A large percentage of great tennis players have been southpaws. Good lefthanded boxers have trouble getting matches.

The term "southpaw" is an old baseball term, originating when the game was played in the sunlight. Fields were plotted with batters facing east, so the setting sun would not blind them. A "southpaw" was one who threw with the arm hanging to the south, that is, lefthanded.

Sports still manages to disenfranchise lefties a bit, even while giving them some advantages. Lefthanded infielders, except at first base, are virtually unknown. Polo forbids lefthanded playing. Until recently there was some reluctance to employ lefthanded quarterbacks. A southpaw also faces a limited selection of baseball gloves, golf clubs and rifles.

Until fairly recently lefthanded children were discouraged from their natural proclivities. Righthanders would be surprised at how many of their friends were traumatized by being converted to righthandedness against their will. Many other attempts failed, but not without pain.

A women who is now a teacher still fears writing at the black board because she is ashamed of her handwriting. In parochial school her knuckles were rapped repeatedly for failure to convert. She was singled out and made to feel like a sinful failure.

Ironically, her writing today is quite good. But she never overcame the feeling that her lefthandedness was unacceptable.

While I was spared the early theological implications of being lefthanded, I still had a heck of a time writing. My public school approached the task as though being lefthanded were merely a mirror image of being righthanded. It is not.

I was taught to slant the paper toward my left, as a righthander slants toward the right. Then I was told to uncurl my wrist. Then I would look "right" as I wrote.

This would be great if I were writing Hebrew, which is written from right to left. For English it is a disaster.

A righthanded person wants to pull the pen across the paper. So does a lefty. But if you make the lefty slant the paper toward the left, you make him or her push, which is tiring, especially for a child.

It also forces the lefthander to write down hill, which gets depressing. And it causes the left hander and paper to get smeared with ink. I received bad grades for neatness when the style they taught me caused me to smear my hand over what I had just written.

When the lefty turns the paper to the right like everybody else, then curls the left wrist around the top of the paper, he or she is then writing "like a righty," that is, writing uphill, pulling the pen and not pushing it, and not smearing the hand across what was just written.

If this seems like a long discourse on a minor issue, it is because you are righthanded. Every lefthander has had to make his or her own reconciliation with living in a righthanded world.

For years corkscrews baffled me. Every screw and bolt I tried to loosen I first tightened. I had difficulty with scissors (elementary art instruction is a special kind of torture I'll take up another time).

Each hand is designed to be stronger when twisting in an outward direction. The right hand naturally wants to rotate clockwise, the left counterclockwise. That means for every twisting movement involving a humanly made object, the lefty is forced to use either the weaker hand or the weaker clockwise movement of the left hand.

Of course, the Latin word for left is sinister, while the word for right is dexter. Too many people think of righthandedness as dextrous, and lefthandedness as awkward or bad, when the world has simply been rigged to fulfill the prejudice of the majority. The tendency is to think "right is right and left is wrong." Wrong.

The political terms "left " and "right" derive merely from where differing political parties sat in the French assembly during the revolution and turmoil of the nineteenth century. The liberals and revolutionaries were to the left, the conservatives and monarchists on the right.

All differences are not insignificant. All ways of solving a problem or living a life are not equally valid. But many of the divisions among people are no more significant than lefty versus righty.

We waste a lot of time fussing and giving people a hard time just because they approach the world a little differently from the rest of us.

U·S. Air Force Academy Rampart Winds to perform

The Rampart Winds is one of the six major performing groups from the U.S. Air Force Academy Band. They will be guests of the South Shore Conservatory when they give a concert at the school, off 19 Fort Hill Street in Hingham, Friday, May 16 at 8 p.m.

The Rampart Winds is a woodwind quintet made up of five professional musicians who are enlisted in the U.S. Air Force. Having passed the demanding competitive audition, these musicians bring to the quintet many years experience in chamber music, which enables them to perform a wide variety of music ranging from light classical to the most demanding chamber works available.

Performances by the Rampart Winds include a young people's series, community concert, university recitals and for music societies. To maintain the highest quality performances, the ensemble spends many hours in preparation for their appearances throughout the United States.

Politicus — by David A. Mittell, Jr.

Dukakis coalition: No Ukrainians need apply?

I've never thought much of "first lady bashing." It has always seemed to me unmanly, if you will tolerate an archaic term, for those whose real quarrel is with, say, President Reagan to go after Nancy; or whose real quarrel is with Gov. Dukakis to go after Kitty. With regard to Mrs. Dukakis: having sauntered and loitered among the Dukakis flock for 20 years, having heard their high idealism and low calculation, I've never heard anyone who knows Kitty Dukakis argue that she is anything but a lovely person. Nor have I ever heard anyone in the inner circle attempt to argue that Mike Dukakis is a nicer person than Kitty Dukakis, although I've heard it argued the other way around plenty of times.

Nevertheless, when a first lady strikes out on her own and engages in political acts in her own name, she has to be judged by those acts like any other political figure. Such an instance obtains in Mrs. Dukakis' role in the terribly unfortunate quarrel between Boston Jews and Ukrainians about whether or not Ukrainian representatives should be permitted to participate in the state's annual holocaust service being held May 9 at the State House.

The facts of the two sides of the question are not complicated, to the contrary they approach being primitive in their atavistic simplicity. Boston area Ukrainians argue that seven to 10 million independent-minded Ukrainian peasants were intentionally starved to death during Stalin's collectivist terror in 1931-32, and that another three million perished under Nazi occupation in World War II. This, they believe, qualifies them to participate along with Jews, Armenians and Cambodians in Massachusetts' annual holocaust observance.

On the other hand, some Boston area Jews, among them holocaust survivors, find the participation of Ukrainians offensive because it is believed that many Ukrainians collaborated with the Nazis and helped run the death camps where Hitler's "final solution" was carried out. Mrs. Dukakis, who herself is Jewish, has concluded that Ukrainian participation in the holocaust service would be "inappropriate." The Ukrainians, outraged, promise to attend anyway — and thus the bitter disagreement stands as of this writing.

In my view Mrs. Dukakis' position condones and therefore is vile racism in its classic, common pattern: blame an innocent nation for the individual acts of its nationals — for the safest haven for a pernicious lie is snuggled in the arms of a nugget of truth. By such "reasoning" Italians become gangsters, Irish drunks, Jews cheats. . .and Ukrainians collaborators.

In the actual, tragic history, surely individual Ukrainians, surely small groups of Ukrainians, were involved in the betrayal of Ukrainian Jews, just as in other occupied countries numbers of Poles, Letts, Austrians, Belgians and French committed treachery and treason. Moreover, there may well have been, on a percentage basis, more Ukrainians involved in betrayal than there were, say, Belgians; for the Soviet state, like its Czarist predecessor, long made it clear to minority peoples such as the Ukrainians that survival could depend on treachery.

There is a long history of Russian rulers exploiting what Mao Tse-Tung called "contradictions among the people." When things weren't going well the Russian people, and minorities such as the Poles and Ukrainians, were encouraged to vent their frustrations on the sub-minority Jews. The people were thus cynically manipulated so that they wouldn't direct their aggression where it belonged, at the rulers themselves.

In 1931-32 under Stalin the Ukrainians themselves became the "scapegoat." Ukrainians were a convenient target for Russian hostility, for the Ukrainian peasant of that era had retained his independent spirit as the Russian peasant had not, and Ukrainians were a separate nation, as different in language and custom from Russians as the Portuguese are from the Spanish.

It is in this cruel set of historic circumstances that vicious anti-Jewish pogroms recurred periodically in the 19th century, and it is in this set of circumstances that when the Germans occupied the Ukraine in 1941 there were undeniable instances of anti-Semitic Ukrainian collaboration, treachery and atrocity. But the great majority of Ukrainians, like the great majority of other European peoples under Nazi occupation, were innocent of complicity in the holocaust; to the contrary, they were fraternal victims of the holocaust.

In short, there was never an anti-Semitic consensus in Ukrainia the way there was in Germany under Hitler. It is therefore more than difficult, it is quite impossible to understand why a minority (as I fervently hope and believe) of contemporary Jews hold the Ukrainian people responsible for the acts of Ukrainian persons. Moreover, there is something the matter with Jewish persons who are quite willing to drive B.M.W.s assembled in Germany by Nazi offspring, who cultivate a latter-day hatred for the Ukrainian people: bigotry. Theirs is as irrational a Jewish position as I've ever heard of or learned about in history.

Surely that isn't Kitty Dukakis' position. But by condoning the slander of an entire people she has committed an act of racism that is no less an injury to the victims than those her husband castigates on television in late-night public service announcements.

Mrs. Dukakis should be held responsible for her poor judgment, but what probably precipitated the insult to Ukrainians was the governor's political strategy. In pursuing the cultivation of constituencies, the Dukakis administration politicizes and therefore trivializes an event like the holocaust commemoration. It becomes a Jewish version of Columbus Day, and Ukrainians seeking to participate become the political equivalent of some Norwegian joining the Columbus Day parade route with a Leif Erikson banner. Seeking to placate the constituency whose "day" it is, the governor's office — in this case the governor's wife — made a political decision about a matter of deep moral, philosophical and historical significance.

The decision made was an awful one, one that injured a people and many persons, one that is deeply resented by a people whose historic injuries only want for publicity to rank with those of peoples the Dukakis administration deems worthy of commemoration. One does not like to be too harsh on one who is primarily serving the interest of her husband, not herself; but if this represents Kitty Dukakis' best political judgment it is just to say that she should revert to christening boats.

In 1973 I had a first-hand glimpse of Ukrainians and Jews in the contemporary Ukraine. My cousin is married to a full-blooded native-speaking Ukrainian. . .Gene Kinasewich, whom some of you will remember as the greatest hockey player who ever went to Harvard. Through Gene's great energy a visit to his ancestral homeland came to pass, and through his great generosity, and that of my parents, I was included.

Throughout our visit to the Soviet Union we were harassed by the authorities for such crimes as taking snapshots in a train station (considered a "military installation"), giving gum to children, and trading American blue jeans with teenagers for Soviet trinkets. Upon arrival in Kiev, Gene had a great deal of difficulty getting Ukrainians to converse with him in Ukrainian in this, the capital of their country.

At some length he was informed that it could be dangerous to be overheard by Russians speaking Ukrainian. It was better to do it in private. Once in private the barriers melted. There was warmth and passion and rich personal depth and searching queries about the Ukrainian diaspora and about the outside world.

The Jews in Ukrainia were quite different in that they took extraordinary risks to approach us. They accosted us openly in public auditoria under the noses of the K.G.B. They, too, asked of the outside world and of the diaspora, and also of Israel and of our helping them obtain Hebrew-Russian dictionaries. The Jews were determined, courageous and defiant in ways that ethnic Ukrainians, whose style seemed to be to survive by drawing their shades and practicing their culture anonymously, were not able to be.

It was easy to see why the Soviets find the Jews so threatening, because, although surely they know fear, what they act on is their courage. Should their courage ever lead to contagion, the Soviets must know that will be the day that Lenin's lie at long last destructs.

Footnote: In preparing this article I telephoned the governor's press office to get Mrs. Dukakis' side of the story. As we went to press the call had not been returned.

'Gourmet Light' is clever cooking

By Peggy Beals

FROM THE BOOKSHELF

Greer Underwood, author of Gourmet Light, regards eating as one of life's pleasures. Speaking at the Third Thursday series in Duxbury, the Hingham resident says she wants to indulge, but "without ballooning so I roll down the street."

Her idea of 'gourmet' is clever cooking, not investing in such costly items as hydroponic lettuce, "which costs more because they didn't cut the roots off" or imported shitake mushrooms. She believes good nutrition is obtainable without limiting the diet to brown rice and bean sprouts.

Underwood achieves the "light" in her meals by inspired ways to omit calories. In a salad dressing she substitutes consomme for most of the oil. She sautes onions in beef stock rather than butter, uses yogurt and seasonings to replace soured and heavy cream.

While she was testing the recipes for her book on her family, her husband's cholesterol count, according to her doctor, showed a remarkable drop.

Her recipes include calorie counts and other nutritional information. Gourmet Light is published by Globe, Pequot for $9.95.

David McCord is a legend in his time. Author of 50 books, his work included in 500 anthologies; his degrees, honors and awards are too numerous to list. He turns up on National Public Radio and in the Boston Globe, and delights in speaking with children at area schools.

McCord, who is in his 80s and nearly bald, was asked by one youngster, "How old are you?"

"How old do you think I am?"

"25."

"No, I'm 26."

"I was close," the child said.

Print cannot hint at the sheer delight of hearing him speak, read, and laugh as heartily as his listeners at the material he shares so enthusiastically. Invited to question him, this group just sat, utterly charmed, replete, until someone said it all: "Do you have to stop now?"

McCord treasures good poetry, by clever, trained, disciplined writers. He wrote for the New Yorker for 30 years, but complains "I can't understand what they print now. The poets are untrained, the music has gone."

Surprisingly, he began his talk by extolling another poet, Betty Billup of Peterborough, N.H., reading several delightful poems from her Pass the Salt. Her unsung book will be carried by Westwinds Bookshop in Duxbury, sponsors of this series, and thanks to McCord, should be a sellout. He praised also the light verse of Morris Bishop and the late John Ciardi.

He recited and commented on some of his poems. "Pickety Fence took half an hour to write and 20 years to sell. They paid me $6 a line. Most of it is one word to a line. $96. Not bad.

"Walnut Tree wasn't published for 57 years."

McCord appears to know his work by heart, an amazing feat. He offered to recite any requests. Someone asked for his parody of late Poet Laureate John Masefield's I Must Down to the Sea Again. Masefield, he explained, once tended bar in New York. He apologized that the parody ended on an "alcoholic note," then reduced everyone to helpless laughter with an hilarious recitation.

Someone had brought a photograph McCord had never seen, showing him at a microphone, flanked by Queen Elizabeth and Prince Phillip. The queen looks very pained. "I don't think she liked my poems."

If you ever get the chance to hear McCord speak, rush to take it, prepared for a rare treat. Meanwhile, his poems are available, some being republished. Members of this audience probably cleaned them out of local libraries.

May's Third Thursday speakers will be Francis Russell, author of the highly praised Sacco & Vanzetti, and David and Lillian Stokes, who've written unsurpassed nature guides. Information on attending is available at Westwinds Bookshop in Duxbury.

Trans-Atlantic flight reenacted at Weymouth

Two flying boats, reenacting the first transatlantic flight, will visit Massachusetts from May 8 through 14.

The flight, commemorating the 75th Anniversary of Naval Aviation, recreates the 1919 crossing that preceded Charles Lindbergh's non-stop, 1927 solo flight.

Three five-man U.S. Navy seaplanes — designated NC-1, NC-3 and NC-4 — left Rockaway, NY, on May 8, 1919. The three aircraft attempted a transatlantic crossing to prove the feasibility of long-range flight.

Chatham, MA, played a vital role during that flight when the NC-4, which had developed engine problems, landed near a U.S. Navy seaplane base in Chatham for repairs. After repairs, the NC-4 successfully crossed the Atlantic in 23 days, landing in Plymouth, England, after stops in Nova Scotia, Newfoundland, the Azores, Portugal and Spain. The other two aircraft were unable to complete the journey.

Two privately-owned, civilian World War II vintage "Catalina" flying boats, designated "NC-4" and "The Spirit of Naval Aviation," will land at the South Weymouth Naval Air Station about 1 p.m. May 8 after leaving kickoff ceremonies in Rockaway, NY. Both aircraft, during the reenactment flight, will follow the times and dates of the original flight.

The event is being conducted under auspices of the 75th Anniversary of Naval Aviation National Committee, located in Washington, D.C. The original NC-4 is on display at the Naval Aviation Museum in Pensacola, Florida.

Lieutenant Commander Albert Read, USN, the pilot of the NC-4, was born in Lime, NH in 1887 attending Whitman High School in Whitman. Read eventually retired at the rank of Rear Admiral.

The following is a schedule of the public reenactment activities for NAS South Weymouth:

May 8 — NC-4 and Spirit will arrive at NAS South Weymouth at 1 p.m. while the station holds an all-hands welcoming ceremony. The media and distinguished visitors will be invited.

May 10 — The NC-4 returns to Naval Air Station South Weymouth for a Visiting Day from 10 a.m. to 4 p.m., where the aircraft will be exhibited to the public along with numerous other military and civilian aircraft. Also scheduled for the Visiting Day is a demonstration by the Navy Parachute Jumpers, concerts by the Newport Navy Band, a crash, fire and rescue demonstration and an antique auto show. Admission is free and concession stands will be available with food, beverage and 75th Anniversary memorabilia.

For more information concerning the NC-4 flight and Visiting Day at NAS South Weymouth, call the station's public affairs office at (617) 786-2607.

Pierson tracking the past of polar pathfinder

By John Magadieu
Mariner Staff

Wigmore Pierson of 123 Atlantic Avenue is hot on the trail of a trailblazer.

Since he settled at Sandy Cove in the big shingled house with white trim and wide porches about a year-and-a-half ago, five people have asked him, "Did you know this is the house where Admiral Richard Byrd spent some summers?"

He did not know, but he wanted to find out whether it was true.

So just as Byrd planned his expeditions to uncover the mysteries of the north and south poles, Pierson set out to uncover some local history, which at times resembled old footprints in the tundra, long covered by snow.

He first picked up the pathfinder's trail in the recollections of Robert Leonard, Cohasset's plumbing inspector and unofficial "town historian."

While on an inspection of the pipes at Piersons place last year, Leonard said he remembered Rear-Admiral Byrd renting the house in the summer of 1928. Leonard said he was about 12-years old then and his father serviced the summer homes on Atlantic Avenue in those days.

The Cohasset old-timer said he believes Byrd rented the house from the Benjamin C. Tower Company of Boston through one of his neighbors. Unfortunately, Pierson found no record of the arrangement.

Edward Tower of 44 Ripley Road, another long-time Cohasset citizen recalled, "I saw Byrd at the post office when I was 15-years-old; I can almost picture him in my mind."

Tower also said Byrd rented a shingle house with white trim at Sandy Cove in 1928.

Pierson said he then went to the Cohasset Historical Society, but still he could find no record, no tangible proof that his house was the summer sanctuary where Byrd may have planned his 1928-1929 expedition to Antarctica.

Frank Patterson, another long-time townie later said he was "absolutely positive" that the house at 107 Atlantic Avenue, just a few doors down from Pierson's place, was the Admiral's summer home.

But Patterson added, he believed Byrd didn't come to the former Fox Estate in Cohasset until the early or mid-1930's.

The first steps are taken to uncover tracks of train

The first tracks toward revitalizing the dormant railway of the South Shore were made last week.

Members of the MBTA citizens advisory committee toured the Greenbush line and made their first observations of an 18-month study.

In Cohasset, the committee members toured the prospective route of the Old Colony line. Committee member Martha Gjesteby was joined by Selectman Diane Sullivan and Historical Society senior curator David Wadsworth. Members of the entourage toured the railroad bed and wandered around the area that may one day include stops along the Cohasset line.

Diane Sullivan, who said she joined the tour just to see where the railroad was once located, said the MBTA may plan to locate two stops in town. There will be no terminal stations, she was assured, but there will be two places where residents can exit and board the train. The two sites have not been selected, but will include a site near Rte. 3A and a downtown location.

"I'm not for it or against it," she said this week. "But it was an interesting tour. I wasn't able to give them much insight into where the train ran years ago, because I wasn't here. But David gave a wonderful, informative talk to the committee members."

The historical society curator met the bus entourage at King Street. "Basically," Wadsworth said, "I talked about the history of Cohasset, and how transportation affected this community.

"Cohasset separated from East Hingham in 1770 and quiclly became known as a prosperous seafaring town. In 1848 or 1849, the railroad came into Cohasset and almost immediately the changes were felt. From everything I have read, the railroad changed this town. By the last half of the century, the fishing fleets were gone and this town was fast becoming a commuter suburb," he explained.

"Hotels came and went," he continued. "Some succeeded and some failed. There was a transformation of this town, which I feel, was due to the coming of the railroad. In 50 years, this town changed from a small fishing community. The impact of transportation on a community is tremendous."

The bus tour, Wadsworth said, rode as closely as possible to the site of the former railroad beds. Possible sites for commuter parking were discussed at the ititial meeting, he said, although no specific locations were decided.

"They talked a lot about the encroachment of the railroad bed within Cohasset Village," he continued. "Although some of the old railroad has been cemented over, the MBTA officials didn't seem to think it was as big a problem as in Hingham where there is a real problem with overcrowded conditions

Poskus to leave for Woburn job security

By Jane Lane
Mariner Staff

"I don't believe in a double standard. Since I've been here, I've treated everyone the same."

Building Inspector Edward Poskus has not shied away from a confrontation,nor backed away from helping someone in need. By using the same standard of fairness with everyone, Poskus says he has steadily gained the respect of most residents and builders in town.

After almost two years to the day (he arrived in Cohasset May 5, 1984) Poskus decided to take another position as building commissioner for the city of Woburn. With his new employment comes a three-year contract - a form of job security Poskus was unable to find in Cohasset.

"Last year there was an article to take the building inspector's job out of the personnel classification schedule, but the article was withdrawn. There is a state law now that enables a municipality to take the position out of the personnel schedule and allow it to be a contract position.

"The reason I took the Woburn job was simply for job security. They offered me a three-year contract, just like I wanted in Cohasset," he said.

Poskus, who politely declines to discuss his age, said the Woburn job may be his last. After that, there is always consultant work for this active man.

A registered architect, he was a partner for many years with the late Horatio W. Beal of Cohasset.

His background in architecture came in handy more than a few times for the town in the past two years.

Since his employment in Cohasset, Poskus has helped the town design plans for the Bates building, the North Cohasset fire station, the town hall addition, Milliken Field renovations, the police and fire station renovations. He also designed the handicapped access ramp which will be installed if and when an addition to the town hall is constructed.

"My job in Woburn was not predicated on my profession as an architect," Poskus said, "but neither was this job."

Although he receivedmany offers, Poskus never accepted an architectural consultant's job for anyone in Cohasset while he worked here. He said it was important to maintain an impartial attitude toward everyone. In that respect, he feels the building inspector should be a non-resident, or someone not affiliated with the trades in this town.

"It really helped coming in as a stranger," he said this week. "I didn't know anyone, and I'm notrelated to anyone here. I treated everyone the same. I

Federal permit sought for work

Cohasset Development Trust is seeking permission from the U.S. Army Corps of Engineers to fill 3,850 square feet of fresh water wetlands with approximately 213 cubic yards of common borrow to provide supermarket parking off Route 3A and Cushing Highway.

The proposed project will create approximately 4,450 square feet of compensatory wetland.

The application for the federal permit was filed with the Engineers in compliance with Section 404 of the Clean Water Act which regulates the discharge of dredged or fill material in United States waters, including wetlands.

To assist in evaluating the proposed work, the Engineers are soliciting public comments. Written statements should be forwarded to their office no later than June 9, 1986. Additional information may be obtained by contacting Karen Adams at the U.S. Army Corps of Engineers, 424 Trapelo Road, Waltham, MA 02254-9149, telephone 617-647-8492 (toll free 1-800-362-4367).

ZBA upholds dump ruling

The zoning board of appeals recently upheld a previous ruling by the building inspector prohibiting the dumping of commercial and industrial wastes into the privately owned Cohasset Heights landfill.

The appeals board voted last week that the original permit issued to previous landfill owner James Tyerar in 1976 was still in effect, limiting the refuse to demolition materials. According to the building inspector and the appeals board, that means rocks, stumps, brick work and other demolition materials may be accepted into the Crocker Lane site. But it excludes the industrial and commercial wastes recently found at the site during an inspection by building inspector Edward Poskus.

Landfill owners Paul and John Barry, represented by Atty. Anton Moerkhe had argued the 1976 permit was not exceeded, but the type of refuse was altered from demolition to general refuse. He argued the special permit issued in 1976 was still in effect today because the land remains a dumping facility.

Committees thanked

In a discussion with selectmen Monday night, planning board chairman Christine Bassett thanked the members of the drainage advisory committee and design review board.

She noted the members of these committees have worked hard for the planning board. "The town has not used enough of their expertise," she commented. "They've really done a yeoman's job and I think they deserve the thanks of the town."

Selectman Diane Sullivan agreed, noting a member of the design review board has been assigned to the police/fire station renovation committee.

Reconstruct basin

In order to eliminate the potential safety hazard at the Country Associates Condominiums on Beechwood Street, the drainage advisory committee recommended the owner reconstruct the retention basin along the front section of the property.

After looking at the basin outlet structure last month, members of the advisory committee saw it was filled with water apparently resulting from rainfall during the preceding week. In a letter addressed to selectmen last week, drainage committee chairman Tom Cook said the only means for the basin to drain is through natural percolation.

"The retention basin outlet structure does not appear to be constructed according to the design reviewed by the drainage advisory committee," he wrote selectmen. "The outlet structure as constructed may not allow the pond to act as a re tention basin and limit water levels below the Beechwood Street road levels."

The committee chairman noted the condominium owners or developers should be required to have additional drainage analysis prepared to ensure the basin outlet will not result in water levels higher than Beechwood Street, and the storm drain is not increasingly affected since construction of the basin.

Dogs must be licensed

Dog licenses are due at the town clerks office all dogs must be licensed and a rabies certificate must accompany the information needed and the fee.

The computer printout reads 957 dogs in Cohasset as of this date there are 501 dogs licensed issued. If any dog is not licensed by May 31, a list of unlicensed dogs will be sent to the dog officer.

Fair housing committee

Selectmen said a Fair Housing Committee, ordered by the state Executive Office of Environmental Affairs, will be established this week.

Executive secretary Donald Andrew received a letter from the district attorney's office outlining the requirement that Cohasset develop a Fair Housing Committee in accordance with state law.

The district attorney's office is overseeing the compliance of all communities in the county in regard to the state law.

At the selectmen's meeting Monday night, chairman Mary Jane McArthur said the town must comply with this executive order. Selectmen decided a member of the housing authority could be part of the new committee, along with a planning board member. A third member of the committee may be recruited at Wednesday night's meeting with town officials to discuss the state's teller funding program.

Police negotiations proceeding

Cohasset police union representative Brian Noonan said more meetings between the personnel committee, the union and the state Joint Labor Management Committee have been scheduled this month.

Talks are proceeding, he said after Monday night's meeting, but no progress has been made toward a settlement of the union contract. Police representatives are working to resolve a contract which will include the past two years. At the same time, negotiations are now combined with meetings for a second two-year contract from July, 1986 through July, 1988.

Selectmen review town employee qualifications

At a meeting designed to listen to the concerns and recommendations of town employees and board members, selectmen heard some discussion about the qualifications of a building inspector and zoning enforcement officer.

Planning board chairman Christine Bassett and conservation commission chairman Merle Brown explained the current building inspector coordinates the approval of final site plans for new housing units. Brown noted if shingling or roofing is to be completed on a house within the wetlands, Edward Poskus now inspects the job and signs off the permit for the conservation commission. The same coordination is followed with the planning board, Bassett said.

Selectmen requested Brown and Bassett submit their recommendations for the duties of a building inspector in writing to the board. Poskus is leaving that position this week. Selectmen have been unable to find a temporary replacement until the position is filled permanently.

Planning board member Robert Sturdy complained Monday night to selectmen there was no enforcement by the building inspector of the regulations enacted by the historic district commission. "If you bother to have an historic district, then someone should check to see what they say, they want, is done," he said to selectmen.

Sturdy noted a larger problem exists within the electrical inspection department of town. "The electrical work in this town is deplorable," he said. "There's a lot of good 'ol boy stuff going on in this town."

That comment angered selectmen Rocco Laugelle and James Gallagher. "The work done in this town is as good or better than in other towns. Our inspector (Steve Wigmore) is a licensed electrician and he knows the code quite well," Laugelle stated.

There was heated discussion between the two about code violations Sturdy had seen in town. The planning board member said as an engineer and property owner in town, he had witnessed several violations of the state electrical code allowed in homes. Laugelle disagreed the inspector allowed any violations to remain.

Gallagher responded angrily to the accusations by saying, "I am a tradesman in town and I haven't seen any local tradesman getting away with murder. Wigmore is very qualified and if anything is getting by, it's by homeowners doing work without a permit. I think you're way off."

Gallagher noted if Sturdy does see violations of the state electrical code in buildings and homes, he should report it to the wiring inspector.

"This town is known as an easy town. I would just like to see everything evenly enforced," Sturdy answered.

Selectmen Mary Jane McArthur requested that Sturdy include his recommendations in a letter to selectmen.

Atlantic Ave resident seeks information on home ...

Gerhard Birmann, who lives there now said, 'I know nothing at all about it; it was never mentioned to me."

Pierson decided to keep digging. He checked out Byrd's book Little America perused The Narrative History of Cohasset, Vol. 2, which was written by local historian Burtram Pratt. Neither book mentioned any relationship between Byrd and Cohasset.

In a phone interview last Friday, Pratt explained, "I don't have any real information, although I do remember as a kid growing up there, that Admiral Byrd did in fact summer at Sandy Cove.

"My father owned a trucking company at that time," he added, "and I recalled he delivered parcels to Admiral Byrd's house."

Pratt said he couldn't remember exactly which was the Byrd house, but that "Bob Leonard is a good enough source for me."

Finally, Pierson got a break, a bizarre coincidence. "One day I was having lunch with a business acquaintance," he said, "and I told him about the house situation and it turned out he worked with Richard Byrd III, the admiral's grandson."

Last Friday, Pierson called Byrd.

According to Pierson, Byrd couldn't recall anything about those summers in Cohasset, but he offered the name of Peter Anderson, a historian at Ohio State University who may yet be Pierson's ticket to proving the explorer's Cohasset connection.

Apparently, the polar pathfinder never threw anything away; Anderson has a warehouse full of Byrd's belongings, 400 large boxes.

"I had a long chat with Anderson," Pierson said. "He and I are going to keep in touch. I'm certain we're going to turn up something along the way."

Anderson, who is working on a definitive biography of Byrd explained, he has three people working full-time, but he hasn't yet been able to look through the mountain of material for such specific information.

"I think we're going to be able to confirm it," Pierson said confidently. "It's just going to take a little bit longer to get that piece of paper that holds the confirmation."

"We're almost there."

Anyone with more information is invited to contact Pierson.

It's been two years of a strict inspector. . .

didn't owe any favors to anyone."

The building inspector, who works within a tiny second floor office at town hall noted, "last week a contractor came up to me and said he learned I was leaving. He heard I was tough, but fair. I tried to be that way. Every decision I made was by the books."

Poskus said he was reacquainted with a lot of old friends since his arrival in Cohasset - friends he made many years ago while designing an addition to the Deer Hill School, "I met a lot of new friends, too. There's a lot of super people in Cohasset, and I'm going to miss them," he added.

He made a promise when he came to Cohasset two years ago. At that time he said, "Every time I hear a hammer pounding in this town, I'll be there."

Since he issued that warning, the builders and carpenters of Cohasset have learned what to expect from the building inspector. "I make every decision according to the town's zoning bylaw and the state building code. If it isn't allowed, I won't allow it. If it's okay by the state code, which is the minimum standard to use, then I will allow it. Always, my decisions were backed by the book. That way, I didn't let personalities get in the way. After two years people knew I wouldn't accept something because I knew their sister-in-law, or brother. If it was allowed under the state code, I would allow it. Simple," he stated.

Since his first days as Cohasset's building inspector Poskus instituted a Stop Work violation notice. In a flamboyant shade of red, the sign is hung in shame on any building where work was completed in violation of the zoning bylaw or state code. Until the work is corrected according to the inspector's approval, the sign remains and no work is allowed. A fine of $50 is levied on anyone beginning work without approval of the building inspector.

Edward Poskus

"We've brought the permit fees into line. This was born out by last year's town report. The value of construction in Cohasset last year was up to $8,878,644. We're running 40 permits ahead of last year. If we weren't requiring permits to be filled out, I wonder how much would be built without permits. Most people realize if they don't have a permit for their job, which includes all demolition, renovation, remodeling and reconstruction work, I'm going to find out sooner or later," he commented.

Poskus hopes his successor is eventually given more space to accommodate the steady flow of office visitors and files that fill the room. Right now, he said, there is no privacy for the inspector to conduct conversations with builders and residents. There is a desperate need for a new file cabinet for his overflowing records, yet there is not enough storage room.

Looking back on the past two years in Cohasset, Poskus said they've been "very enjoyable. I've met a lot of nice people in this town. I've got three years in my contract with Woburn. Who knows, maybe after that, I'll retire completely."

Selectmen's Briefs . . .

Engineering contract okayed

Selectmen this week approved payment of a $15,851 bill to the board of health's engineering consultants, Camp, Dresser and McKee.

The bill included services for the review and evaluation of the design and operation of Cohasset Heights Ltd. landfill. The services were provided from October, 1985 to May, 1986.

Conservation members needed

Chairman of the conservation commission, Merle Brown, told selectmen this week member Robert Maki has submitted his resignation from the board. He noted there is another member who must travel and therefore is not present for many meetings.

He suggested that a civil engineer or attorney would be an appropriate choice for the commission. Anyone interested in serving on the commission should submit a resume to the selectmen's office.

Where's the air conditioners?

Selectmen this week inquired what happened to the air conditioning units appropriated by town meeting last year.

Wiring Inspector Steve Wigmore stated the electrical service must first be changed in the town hall to accommodate the units. He was told to wait until a decision is made regarding an addition to the building. He said the electrical service at the Bates Building can accommodate two window units, but there are no units to be installed.

There was some confusion whether the units have been ordered. But selectmen said the order should be filled and installed before the warm weather, regardless of the status of a town hall addition.

Cohasset Special Olympics returns with 12 Gold medals

By Wilma Goodhue
Special to the Mariner

The Cohasset Special Olympics team recently returned from the Plymouth County Track and Field Special Olympics at Brockton High School with 12 gold medals, four silver and one bronze medal and six ribbons.

The team has been training for events in the Special Olympics since the beginning of April and has been lucky to have had a lot of helpers, including Toni Jillson and Tracey Malloy, Cohasset Special Education teachers; Michael Weydt and Dennis Kuntz, physical education instructors, and Matthew's dad, Ernest Grassey of Cohasset.

Lots of parents and several high school students helped coach three times a week. Also a big thank you to our special friend, Chip Muncey, who helped teach us to ice skate, as well as train for this Olympics. The team practiced throwing softball, running, relay racing, broadjumping and throwing tennis balls through a hoop.

Team members were all excited about the big day, and all arrived early at school wearing new Olympics sweatshirts which helped keep them warm. The team left school a little late and, after an eventful ride, arrived too late for many of the students to march in the parade. That part has always been fun for everyone as the students proudly carried the Cohasset banner together. Students did hear two of their mothers saying that it was the first year they hadn't cried (team members' parents find the Olympics a very emotional day!)

The rest of the morning, students were busy finding where their events were located and waiting for their turns.

The events were grouped by sex, age and pre-trial results. The Cohasset events were softball throw, 50 meter run (including one member of the team, who brought home the gold by racing on his own in a wheelchair). Since then his friends at school have called him "The Silver Streak"!

It's a lot of fun hearing people cheer for the team. It makes members feel so happy and good about themselves. Everyone got to participate in at least one event before they had lunch, donated by Burger King. Wow! That was great!

David Goodhue congratulates his brother, Michael, a member of the Cohasset Special Olympics team.
(Jim Wiltraut)

Moms are famous for their delicious buffet, complete with candelabra, tablecloth and centerpiece!

Then down came the rain! Cohasset team members haven't forgotten the feeling of waiting for their turn to throw the softball while soaking wet.

At 1 p.m., officials announced that events were being postponed. The team was disappointed that they couldn't finish competing, but was very glad to be back in a dry bus and heading home!

The team wanted to thank the Cohasset Rotary Club and Cohasset Boosters Club for donating money to help pay expenses, and the Cohasset Public Schools for their encouragement and support.

In all, the team brought home 12 gold medals, four silver medals, one bronze medal and six ribbons. But more than that, members came away with a real sense of pride and accomplishment. The many weeks of practice and hard work paid off. None of this would have been possible without commitment, support, encouragement and caring.

The Cohasset Special Olympics Team is comprised of: Shawn Cheverie, Quincy; Michael Goodhue, Norwell; Matthew Grassey, Cohasset; Joey Hegner, Hull; Alyssa LaCroix, Cohasset; Brooke Miele, Quincy; Paul Mullare, Hanover; Tim Myers, Cohasset; Jay Nothnagle, Cohasset; Peter Plante, Cohasset; Jennifer Porter, Hanover; Eric Sisson, Weymouth; Steven Skayne, Quincy; Adam Smith, Quincy; Marty Wall, E. Weymouth and Ryan Wiggs, Cohasset.

Winner announced for Art Center's summer festival

Peabody artist Diane Pasiuk was awarded the first prize in the South Shore Art Center's search for a poster and program cover design for its 31st summer art festival.

Pasiuk's design using red and black ink and incorporating the name for the summer festival "Celebration!" was selected from nine designs submitted to the Center at 103 Ripley Road in Cohasset. Two designs submitted by Joanna Hodgens of Wollaston were given a second prize and an honorable mention and third place went to Susan Buckley of Cohasset.

Pasiuk's design will be used to advertise and promote this 31st annual South Shore Arts Festival which brings together the visual and performing arts on the Cohasset Common, June 27, 28 and 29. "Celebration!" will include juried exhibits, invitational shows, a craft exhibit, artist demonstrations, children's art workshops and dance, musical and dramatic performances for children and adults.

Many volunteers and support staff of the South Shore Art Center are working to make this as good as summer festival as the past ones. Working on the juried show is Ali Swedock of Scituate, juried photography exhibit, Amy Whorf of Hingham; invitational show, Ron and Mary Goodwin of Cohasset; members show, Marie Macklin of Cohasset; Patriot Ledger Children's Show, Carol Matzell of Quincy and Susan Kilmartin of Hingham; craft exhibit, Janet Tooker of Scituate; and President's Choice exhibit, Claffy Williams of Cohasset. Judy Volungis of Cohasset is coordinating a children's exhibit.

The Music Circus benefit concert featuring Lionel Hampton and his Orchestra plus Woody Herman and his "Young Thundering Herd" is being coordinated by Linda Wakeman and Jackie Ralston of Cohasset and Garrison Rousseau. The Champagne Preview at the Oaks is being put together by Barbara Cross of Cohasset. Anita Franks of Scituate and Joni Jensen of Canton are coordinating performances; Jensen is also coordinating business sponsors and awards.

Margaret Tittemore of Weymouth is in charge of artist demonstrations and Marion Bush of Hingham is in charge of coordinating the volunteers and hostesses for the three day festival. Hanging of the exhibits is being handled by Ann Murphy of Marshfield and Edward Minchin of Rockland. Paul Maciel of Cohasset and Marion Bush are coordinating the tents and the security.

Denise Ripley of Cohasset is putting together the raffle. Administrative assistance is being given by Margaret Dillion, director of the South Shore Art Center and secretarial assistance by Ellen Winn. Robin Suhrbier is handling public relations.

☐ Kimberly and Erin Steimle of Cohasset both came in third in the 12 years and under division during the New England Baptist Hospital's Spring Run for Fun, May 3.

☐ Elizabeth Gruber of Jerusalem Road, will receive a bachelor of science degree in social work from Salve Regina-The Newport College, Newport, Rhode Island, Sunday, May 18.

☐ Congratulations to Sandra Best, a special gal who certainly receives a super honor this week. Sandra will be awarded the DAR (Daughters of the American Revolution) Good Citizen Award, at a luncheon held at the Lothrop Historical House May 14. Sandra is a senior at Cohasset High School, and a METCO student.

☐ Do you remember when a group of students from Japan came to spend a summer in 1981? There were 25 students, all part of the Inner Study Program. One of the boys stayed with Mr. and Mrs. David Campbell, and his name as Koji Takamatsu. Believe it or not, Koji was here in Cohasset recently, on his honeymoon! Koji wanted his bride, Kazuko, to see the place that he grew to love so much, as well as meet his "other parents" of whom he grew so fond. Imagine coming all the way from Tokoyo to Cohasset to spend your honeymoon! We understand that Koji was a better "tour director" than most Cohassetites would be, and that Kazuko fell in love with our town, too. That certainly shows that the foreign exchange programs work out well, doesn't it?

☐ Plans are underway for a special luncheon, and I have been asked to announce it early so that you can make your plans accordingly. On June 4, at Hugo's there will be a professional singer by the name of Jana Wacker, who will do her singing as well as giving an inspirational message of hope. Jana is well-known in her field, and is said to be one of the best, both as a singer and a speaker. Three women have offered their babysitting services, and the Second Congregational Church has offered their Children's Room, so there will be babysitting at no charge. The event will take place at noon, and the tickets are $14 available at Forget-Me-Nots (the nifty gift shop across the street from Cohasset Savings Bank.) Don't miss this inspirational luncheon.

☐ You won't believe that the time has arrived, especially with the weather that we have been experiencing, but it is time for the Memorial Day Parade schedule to be announced. To be held on May 26, it will begin by reporting at Post Headquarters for First Call at 8 a.m. Assembly will be held at 8:15 a.m. It will arrive at the North Cohasset Honor Roll at 9 a.m. and be at Woodside at 9:30 a.m. Beechwood Cemetery will be next on the schedule, with arrival slated for 9:45 a.m. Next on the docket is the Sohier Street Assembly, which will take place at 10:30 a.m. (here's hoping that the lilacs get enough sunshine for the flowergirls to carry, and throw into the harbor in memory of our veterans), then on to Central Cemetery at 11 a.m. The parade will arrive in the Village Square at 11:30 a.m. and arrive at Veterans' Memorial Park at noon. Be sure not to miss this parade, the men and women put a lot of time and effort into this Memorial Day rememberance, and the annual event is a grand effort indeed. Included in the parade is a band, Legion and other veterans, Legion Auxiliary, High School Band, Girl Scouts, Girl Scout Brownies, Boy Scouts and Cub Scouts.

☐ The Cohasset Historical Society's Museum Tour takes place this Friday, to begin at 11 a.m. and include the two museum buildings in Cohasset Center with curator David Wadsworth as guide. Don't miss this piece of Cohasset history, call and make your reservation today. The telephone number is 383-6791, and a $1 donation is requested.

☐ Congratulations to Alfred Odermatt, who recently received an award from the Voluntary Action Center of the United Way of Massachusetts Bay for his significant volunteer service with the American Red Cross. He was one of 37 volunteers from various health and human services agencies who were honored. Mr. Odermatt has been a dedicated Red Cross volunteer for over 20 years, was secretary of the Board of Directors of the former Red Cross Chapter (Cohasset), is involved with Red Cross Blood services and is Chairman of all Cohasset blood-mobiles.

☐ The Elizabethan Company will present Sheridan's great classic comedy, "The Rivals," May 16, 17, 23 and 24 at 8 p.m. at Wilder Memorial Hall, 666 Main St., in Hingham.

Tickets are $6 at the Hingham Square Book Shop, The Library, at the door or call 545-7046.

☐ That's it from here, be sure to fill us in on your newsworthy events that should be in print for all to know about'

The Scoop on Souppes

(This is a weekly column which will provide updates of our plans to exchange residents of Cohasset and our sister city of Souppes-sur-Loing in France. Ed.)

Plans are underway for the exchange of a small group of families and young people from the Sister Cities Cohasset and Souppes-sur-Loing.

The Cultural Exchange Committee is now taking applications from anyone who is interested in either travelling to Souppes or hosting Souppes visitors sometime this year.

According to Mrs. Keim, chairman of the Cultural Exchange Committee, "Souppes has done her homework well. We now have on file five profiles of French families who want to become involved in some type of exchange program with us." As of this date, the following Souppes applications have been received:

A family with three children—two sons aged 15 and 9, one daughter aged 13—would like to host a young person from Cohasset this summer, dates and duration of visit are open. In exchange they would like their eldest son to visit Cohasset the following August, 1987. They have a home in the Alps where they vacation for two weeks in August, and they spend the rest of the month travelling around southern France. Their family interests include camping, hiking and tennis.

A family with one son, aged 16, would like to host a 16-year-old boy for the month of July, 1987. In exchange they would like their son to visit Cohasset sometime this summer. They have a beautiful home on a lake in Remauville and an apartment in Paris. Their family interests include theatre, concerts, art museums and galleries, tennis, and swimming.

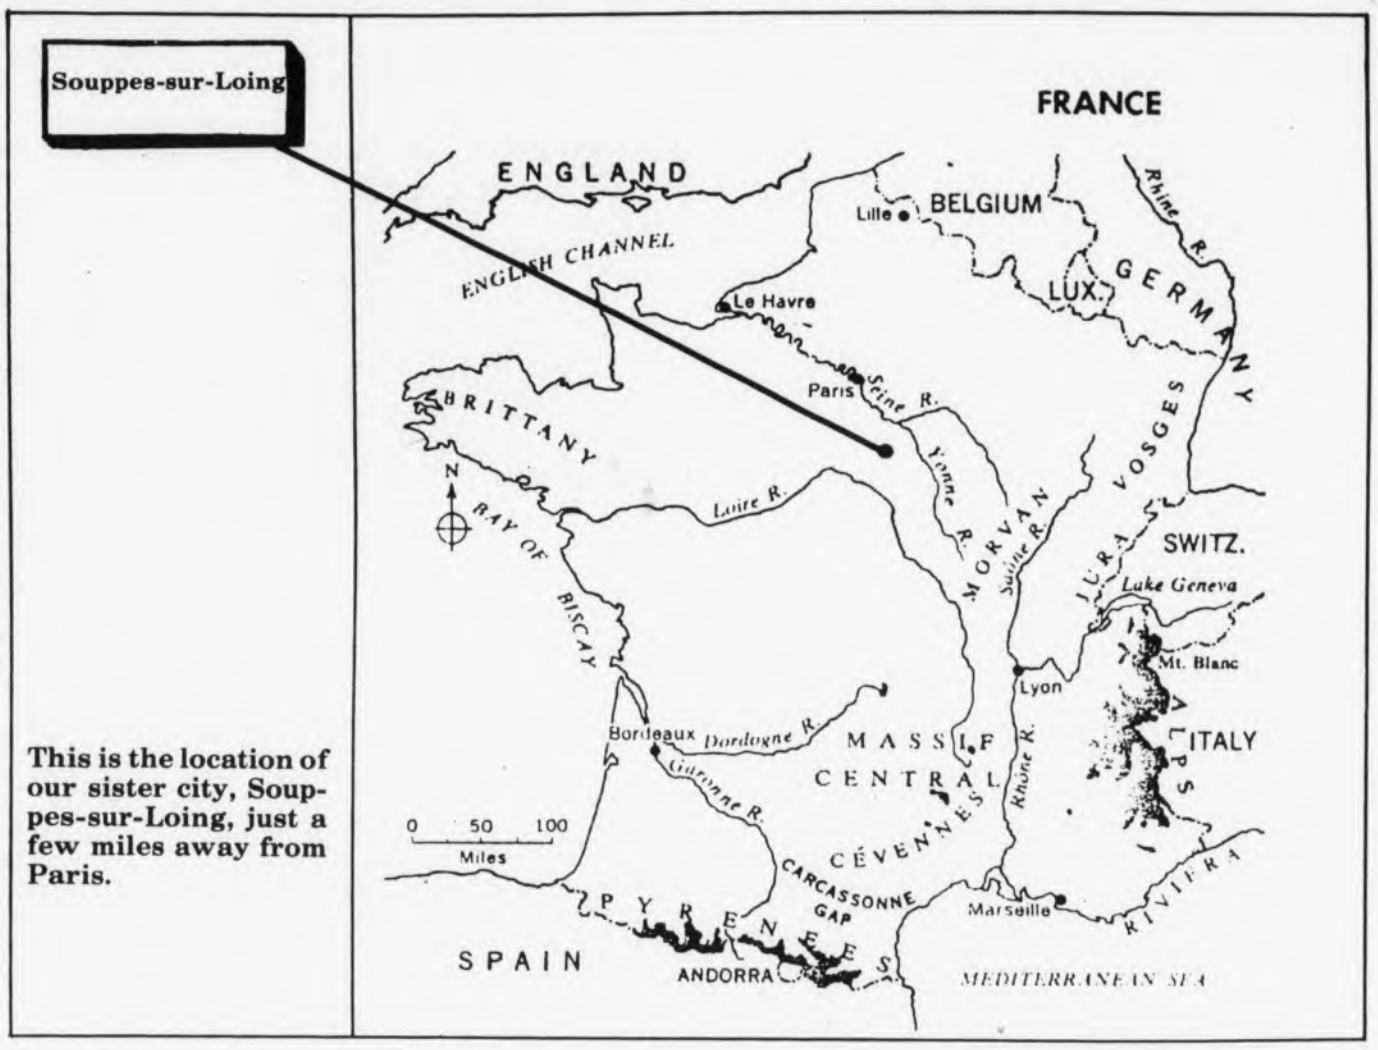
A family with a daughter 18 and a son 13 would like either a small family or a few young people the ages of their children to visit anytime this year. In exchange, they would like their daughter, who is majoring in English at the University, to visit Cohasset sometime this summer. Their family interests include all sports, especially tennis, and they are frequent visitors of Paris and Fontainbleau.

A family with three children, one of whom is 20 years old, would like a young person of the same age to visit Souppes in exchange for their child to come here sometime this year.

A couple with no children, in their late 30's, have opened their home to any Cohasset adults who would like to spend some time in Souppes while travelling throughout Europe. In exchange, they would like to tour the United States and visit with a Cohasset family for a few days.

Already, two Cohasset families have committed themselves to the program. Mr. and Mrs. Terry O'Leary, their daughter Jennifer and their sons Peter and Matthew, have graciously extended an invitation to Mayor Prudhomme's 13-year-old granddaughter, Diane, to stay with them for the month of July. In addition, Mr. and Mrs. Gordon Hislop, their daughter Shona and son Jonathan, have opened their home this year to Souppes visitors.

Mrs. Mildred Mitman, vice chairman of the Cultural Exchange Committee, noted, "The nature of creative exchange possibilities for our sister cities to explore are endless. I have received several inquiries regarding such things as a house exchange, senior citizen exchange, and school term exchange. We hope all of our residents will think about how they might want to personally take advantage of this program. It would be especially nice to involve some families with young children.



This is the location of our sister city, Souppes-sur-Loing, just a few miles away from Paris.

In addition to performing its task as a conduit of information between Cohasset and Souppes families, the committee has also been busy planning activities to celebrate Mayor Prudhomme's visit in July. "We are seeking individuals who have some familiarity with the French language to help us make the Mayor and his small group feel comfortable here," stated Mrs. Rosette Greco, corresponding secretary of the Cultural Exchange Committee. "This is a wonderful chance for people who have spent many years long ago learning a skill that they no longer have the opportunity to use." Anyone who can give a few hours of time during the Mayor's visit should call Mrs. Greco, 383-1386.

The next meeting of the Cultural Exchange Committee is Monday, May 19, at 8 p.m. at the Lothrop House. All are welcome to attend.

Audubon Society bird-a-thon is May 17

The Massachusetts Audubon Society will hold its third annual bird-a-thon Saturday, May 17, and the South Shore Regional Center in Marshfield hopes to raise close to $2,000 from it to benefit its programs.

David Clapp, director of the South Shore Regional Center, said the bird-a-thon has three purposes: to raise funds, to check on the number of species in the state and to provide enjoyment for participants.

Teams of birders from Mass. Audubon sanctuaries across the state will compete to see which group can sight the greatest number of species. Participants will pledge a certain amount for each species sighted, or gather pledges from other people.

REAL ESTATE GUIDELINES
By Norma Telesco
Home Center Realty

TALK TO YOUR REALTOR

Almost every week, one of my agents will tell an anguished tale of working for months with buyers who say they really want a specific kind of home, say a center hall colonial. Then they buy a sleek contemporary!

Maybe what was most important was a high-tech kitchen or wooded lot, and these could have counted for more than the style of the house itself. To save you time and to spare you from being shown dozens of homes that are completely inappropriate to your needs, talk to your Realtor! Tell him what you need, not just in terms of style or number of bedrooms. What kind of furniture do you have? Do you have any hobbies that must be accommodated? Are you handy enough to take on major fix-up projects, or do you want a home in move-in condition? What do you like or dislike about your current house?

Don't be the strong, silent type with your Realtor. Provide constant feedback—negative and positive—so he can more easily rule out the homes that just don't work and find just the right new home for you and your family.

If you're considering a move in the near future, call the professionals at Home Center Realty. Our number is 749-8833, or just drop by our offices at 57 Water St., Hingham. We can serve all your real estate needs.

Editorial

The first step

It might be far in the distance, but some folks here can hear the clanging of a train in our future.

A year ago, a question appeared on our election ballot and voters in Cohasset approved it by a wide margin. Residents favor the restoration of the commuter railroad through Cohasset.

Two members of our community, Martha Gjesteby and Debra Cook, have been appointed to a special citizens advisory committee overseeing the first steps in revitalizing and rehabilitating the Old Colony railroad from Braintree to the Greenbush terminal. They are just in the beginning stages, but the process has started.

Cohasset, although not in sure dire need as towns further south, is transportation poor. We have no intra-town bus service, no easy access to the MBTA Red Line, and no public transit to the commuter boat system.

Commuter rail may be just what we need for sound, easy access into neighboring communities and into Boston.

There may be some, especially merchants and residents in the downtown area, who look on the restoration of the rail line as something akin to the construction of high rise condos along Jerusalem Road. It's something we've done without for many years, so why bother with it now?

Because the majority says, "it's a good thing — bring it back." You talk with our elderly residents and they can tell you wonderful stories about the unharried train ride along beautiful coastal communities into the state's capital city. A day trip into Boston meant little more than a short walk to the train stop at Greenbush, North Scituate or in downtown Cohasset. It was a pleasant way to travel, they remember.

Perhaps it can be made even more pleasant. With modern technology must we worry about cracking foundations of homes and businesses? With planned controls, must we be concerned about the potential traffic hazards?

This is what the citizens committee is about. They will help the MBTA's consultants decide what safety features should be incorporated, what types of track and trains should run along the crowded residential and commercial streets.

Let's take this project one step at a time, which is how it seems to be progressing. With input from the citizens committee, the professional planning consultants hired by the MBTA will be able to provide needed corrections and amendments to the previous railroad system.

Let's listen to what the committee proposes, look at what the consultants plan. It may result in the development of a transportation that will free the South Shore from the bondage of the expressway and ease our transportation woes.

This is but the first step in a long, involved process. The commuter rail will not be revived overnight. But with input from residents, businesses and town officials, the project will continue.

It may be too soon to listen for the rumbling of trains, and too outdated to envision the steam from a roaring locomotive. But someday, maybe Cohasset will once again host a transportation system that will provide an uncomplicated connection with the urban world where we work, shop and play.

Commissioners' sewer plan wasteful

Letters

To the Editor:

Sewer Commissioner Edward Guild, in a letter published last week, says that one-third of the town could have been sewered at a cost to Cohasset of only 4.4 million dollars, using the Metcalf & Eddy plan.

Why then, are we spending more than 1 1/2 million dollars to increase our sewered area by a very small number of dwellings, for a total of perhaps one tenth of the town, probably less? The mickey mouse connection to Hull will have to be supplemented some day in the not so distant future, for a total far more than 4.4 million dollars.

The town was stampeded into "inactive alternatives" because of allegations that M & E would bankrupt the town. Now the Sewer Commissioner says it would have cost the town only 4.4 million dollars. When funded by bonds paid for over 20 to 30 years, that doesn't seem like bankruptcy.

Actually Mr. Guild has his figures wrong again, but it is amusing to have the sewer commission state that for only 4.4 million dollars we could have had our own treatment plant and sewered one third of the town. The current figure is 3.4 million for Phase I; to increase the sewered area to one-third of the town is a bit more than an extra million.

Whatever funding may be or may not be available for repairs to on-site systems would have applied to the M & E plan just as much as to the Ward-Edsel debacle. But the sewer commissioners touted this as a major advantage of the Ward Plan "sewer the entire town". All it seems to do is add a few dwellings to our existing sewered area, saddle the town with a share of maintaining and operating the Hull plant, and exhaust our one chance at the funding trough without really solving our long terms problems.

in the square.

Wadsworth and Sullivan both emphasized no large terminals are envisioned for Cohasset. "They'll be two 'kiss and ride' commuter stops within the town," Sullivan said, "but because this is just in the planning stages, no locations were seriously discussed. There will definitely be no terminals. "That's what they're planning for the end of the line in Greenbush."

Gjesteby, who also attended the tour as part of Cohasset's advisory committee member, said she requested at some point the group walk the Greenbush line from Hingham into Cohasset. "I think we would get a better feel of what was once there and where this railroad would go," she said this week.

Gjesteby, who said she has not decided whether to support the railroad plans, said she discussed the proposed project with residents. "I haven't decided whether to support this plan," she noted, "but I've talked to a lot of people who want this, and some who do not."

Cohasset voters last year approved by a 7-1 margin referendum ballot questions which inquired whether residents support rehabilitation of the Old Colony Greenbush line.

The tour, arranged last week by MBTA officials and their consultants who are investigating the project, was the second trip undertaken by the citizens advisory committee. The first tour included a bus trip along the Old Colony Middleboro line.

"There were no conclusions reached by this committee last week," an MBTA official emphasized. "It was simply the start of a long, involved look into the possibility of restoring the railroad. There's a lot of work yet to be done."

Murray's Memos By Mary Jeannette Murray

Difficulties getting nomination signatures

Candidates for statewide office in Massachsuetts are up against many hurdles. One of these, especially difficult for Republican candidates, is getting signatures for nomination papers.

Depending on the office, a candidate must have a certain number of certified signatures to have his or her name appear on the ballot. Most statewide offices require 10,000 certified signatures while others require 5,000. No real reason is apparent for the different requirements. For Republican candidates, the signatures must be from either registered Republicans or Independents and for Democrats, only registered Democrats or Independents may sign the nomination papers.

Republicans have had an especially difficult time meeting this requirement in Massachusetts.

One obvious reason is that Republicans make up only 13 percent of the registered voters in this state. While this percentage continues to grow, it is still admittedly low.

Obviously, there must be some reasonable signature requirement to ensure that only serious candidates' names appear on the ballot. Some reduction in the number of signatures required would be appropriate, however. The legislature would be wise to consider the prevailing circumstances and change the requirement.

Volunteers who worked very hard recently to collect signatures for their respective candidates deserve congratulations. Whether they did this for Republicans or Democrats, these people participated in the democratic process and ensured that the voters of Massachusetts have a chance to consider voting for these candidates in the election.

Wompatuck planners want more water activities

By John O'Donnell
Mariner Staff

The Wompatuck State Park Advisory Council and planners for the state Department of Environmental Management are looking for ways to increase water activities inside the park.

Last week the Cohasset water commission unanimously rejected a proposal from DEM planners that would allow canoeing and the construction of a boat ramp and parking area at the Cohasset Reservoir.

DEM planner Jack Lash told the Wompatuck Advisory Council last week that concerns about litter and bathing in the reservoir prompted the water commission to deny the request.

"We understand their position," Lash said. "They' re under the gun with any questions about use of a public water supply."

The approximately 60-acre reservoir is the primary source of water for the Beechwood area of Cohasset and is an auxilliary supply for the rest of the town.

Bank fishing is currently allowed on the reservoir, and picnics and hiking are permitted near the reservoir according to a 10-year-old agreement between the water commission and the state, Lash said.

Swimming or bathing in a public water supply is prohibited by state law. The advisory council and the DEM are exploring the possibility of creating a swimming area somewhere in the park.

"The first question campers ask when they come to the park is 'where can I swim' or 'where can I fish'," said Lash. "We've got to try to provide more recreational opportunities inside the park."

Rowboats are currently permitted on the reservoir, but canoes and sailboats are prohibited. Lash said that the water commission fears that canoes and sailboats will tip over and contaminate the water supply.

The advisory council and the DEM want to increase fishing opportunities on the reservoir by building trails and opening areas along the banks of the reservoir.

The water commission rejected the plan, and also denied the state permission to construct a boat ramp and an access road and parking area at the reservoir.

"They're overreacting to what to expect from us," said advisory council member Donald Kennedy of Cohasset. "They feel there will be hoards of people backing their cars up to the water and wading in waist-high."

"It's really not fair," said Council Chairman Robert Garvin of Hingham. "We explained to them that it would be low-key."

Right now boaters must either walk through the woods or contact the park supervisor to open the Beechwood Road barrier to get to the reservoir. There are no signs directing people to the reservoir.

One advisory council member thought that the state had the power to construct a boat ramp.

"I thought we had a little leverage, said Allerton Bonney of Scituate. "Cohasset is using part of the state park for water storage. The way I understood it we could put a boat ramp in.

"The problem is that a lot of people don't look at the park the same way I do," he said. "I look at it as a state park. They look at it as Cohasset's piece, Hingham's piece, Norwell's piece, and Scituate's little piece."

Jack Dixon of the state Division of Wildlife and Fisheries said that it would be possible to create a fishing area for children in one of the seven small ponds in the park.

"Sunfish or panfish would do well in the ponds," Dixon said, "and they're relatively easy fish to catch. They're good for kids, because if kids don't catch a fish every four minutes, they start to lose interest."

Ah, hope springs eternal as tulips bloom along a N. Main Street garden.

Theatre sets ambitious program

The Young People's Summer Theatre of Scituate is gearing up for its 10th anniversary season of theater for youth and musical entertainment.

Don Capen, director, recently met with the Parent-Member Consultant Committee for its April meeting and announced the program this year would be the most ambitious undertaking since its debut in 1977.

Capen said that there will be two full-scale musical productions presented, a first for the group. "In the past," Capen stated, "we have done two shows but one of them had a small sized cast. This year, everyone who joins the group will perform in both." There have been two weeks between performances in previous seasons which have included more than one production. This year, there will be only one week.

The first show, "Sugar," based on the Broadway musical, "Some Like It Hot," that starred Jack Lemmon, Tony Curtis and Marilyn Monroe, will be presented July 31, Aug. 1 and Aug. 2.

The second show, a gala 10th anniversary musical revue, will be presented Aug. 8 and Aug. 9. This will be a retrospect of scenes and songs from all 17 YPST musicals.

This will include memorable moments from such shows as "Guys and Dolls," "Damn Yankees," "Sweet Charity," "Chicago," "On the Twentieth Century" and many more. Capen will direct both shows.

The group is open to any resident of area towns, who are between the ages of 13 and 22 years-old. No one is turned down from performing, but auditions are held for casting the shows.

There will be a Registration Meeting Monday, June 2 at 7 p.m. at the First Trinitarian Congregational Church on Country Way. Details about the program will be discussed, and new members are especially encouraged to attend. There is a non-refundable registration fee of $25, payable at the meeting or auditions. If the fee is mailed into YPST prior to June 1, there will be a $5 discount.

Auditions will be held on Saturday, June 7 from 7 to 10 p.m., and Sunday, June 8 from 5:30 to 10 p.m., also at the church. Additional registration will be held at these times, also.

The program is conducted evenings from 6:45 until 10 p.m. Those with jobs and other commitments are encouraged to join since YPST will accommodate these members.

Further information and registration forms are available by calling 871-5831 or writing YPST, P.O. Box 41, Scituate.

Portiuncula Miniatures at Cardinal Cushing

Prescott (Woody) Baston, creator of Sebastian Miniatures, will be at Cardinal Cushing School and Training Center from noon to 2 p.m. on Saturday, May 17 to sign and date the newly commissioned Portiuncula Sebastian Miniature.

St. Colleta Guild of Cardinal Cushing School and Training Center had commissioned the artist to design and create a miniature replica of the famous Portiuncula Chapel, which is the burial site of the late Richard Cardinal Cushing of Boston.

Sebastian figurines are a collectors' item and their value increases over the years. The guild commissioned 200 large base Portiuncula Sebastian Miniatures which will be numbered, dated and signed by the artist. These are available for $100. Two hundred will be made and then the mold will be destroyed.

First place, South Shore Conference Season; first place, South Shore Conference Playoffs; and third place, District 4 Mini One on One.

Participants included Pat Hammett, Dan Cohen, Matt D'Arrigo, Mike Garside, Rich Jacobus, Josh Summers and Chris Ventolieri.

'Gramercy Ghost' appears at Town Hall May 16-18

Sally Rossi as Natsie seems a bit apprehensive as she points out a possible apparition to Hal McLaughlin as Nathaniel.

Peter Tolman, the police officer, appears a bit puzzled in this mystery production.

Fran Hawks portrays the cool Augusta Ames in the Dramatic Society's production of the comedy, "Gramercy Ghost."

Connie White is all smiles—but why? Visit the friendly apparitions as they appear in this weekend's Dramatic Society production.

Two of the ghosts, Bonnie Haley and Dave Sweeney, ponder their future in the play by John Cecil Holm.

Memorabilia needed

Collectors of Cohasset nostalgia are sought by the local Visiting Nurse Association to help in the agency's celebration of its 75th Anniversary.

The VNA of the South Shore Inc. is asking present and former residents to share their scrapbooks and photographs, souvenirs, news clippings and memories of visiting nurses over the years. Also sought are memorabilia on the home health nurses of the Cohasset Social Service League, founded in 1911.

The Visiting Nurse has been a part of community tradition since the first nurses travelled by trolley throughout the South Shore towns. Through the Great Depression, two World Wars and the years between and since, the visiting nurse has touched many people's lives and provided help for many in need.

Call the Community Relations Director at 849-1710 or 843-0947. All memorabilia will be handled with care and returned to owners.

AFS auction May 16

If May is here can the AFS Auction Evening be far behind?

The happy answer is the auction will take place Friday, May 16.

But this time the evening will have a new, more sophisticated look, according to Jo-Ann Rossi, AFS Chapter President.

"Of course we will have great items to bid on, as always," said Rossi, "but we really want people to enjoy themselves, so we are holding the Auction Evening at Hugo's were folks can sample the free hors d'oeuvres, order any drink from the no-host bar, enjoy the great view and see all their friends."

As in the past, admission is free. Auction Preview begins at 7:30 p.m. The auction will start promptly at 8 p.m.

Auction Chair Jayne Nussdorfer and her committee have been searching near and far for some new and unique items as well as the old favorites, such as an afternoon of flying over Cape Cod or a weekend at a ski house in Vermont.

According to Rossi, proceeds from the auction go towards maintaining the AFS scholarship program in Cohasset,whichprovides international exchange opportunities for high school students.

This year four Cohasset students have been accepted for the program and will be travelling to such places as Brazil, Indonesia and Germany.

Cohasset is also hosting one foreign student this year, Miss Carine Mortiaux of Belgium, who is living with the William Lean family on South Main Street.

If you would like to make a donation to the auction or would like more information about the Auction Evening, contact Jo-Ann Rossi at 383-6818 or Jane Goedecke at 383-6935.

Tickets are available at Fleming's, Cohasset Center. Cost is $4 per ticket. Senior Citizens are invited to attend the Sunday, May 18 matinee at no charge.

Faculty concert at conservatory

Susanne Dewart Osberg and James Chubet will present a program of music for piano duo Saturday, May 10 at 8 p.m. at the South Shore Conservatory in Hingham. The pianists are both members of the Conservatory faculty.

For their Conservatory concert the artists have chosen music by Mozart, Schubert and Bizet for piano duo.

The South Shore Conservatory is located off 19 Fort Hill Street in Hingham. This program is presented free of charge for the enrichment of the South Shore community.

The start of Saturday's Little League Parade included these smart-looking marchers along South Main Street.

Thank You Cohasset Parents

Thanks to receptive Cohasset residents and a hard working group of volunteers, this year's PSO Phone-A-Thon was the most successful ever!

Fundraising co-chairmen Sabina Noering and Jane Bishop report that $6,500 were pledged by the 750 families who were called.

This generous support will help the PSO to continue its exciting programs for the 1986-1987 school year. The PSO, a non-profit organization, provides educational programs and classroom enrichment over and above the existing curriculum and acts as a communiciations vehicle between parents, teachers and school.

Local realtors donated their offices and phones so every parent of a Cohasset student could be contacted. Our thanks to the people at Dean and Hamilton, Peterson Realty, Coastal Country Properties, Dwyer and Mullin and Hunneman.

....And a gentle reminder, if you haven't returned your pledge envelope, please mail your donation today!

Record attendance at PSO talk on 'hurried child'

A record number of parents, teaches and school administrators attended the PSO's (Parent School Organization) Annual Meeting, May 8 at CHS.

The discussion topic of the evening was "The Hurried Child," based on the book of the same name by child development expert, David Elkind. Cases of childhood burnout are a relatively new phenomenon, the result often of two-career couples organizing kids' lives around an array of classes and play dates, a panel of four teachers agreed.

Cohasset educators: Christine Collins, F. Alan MacDonald, Joseph Becker and Michael Gill suggested that a combination of low self-esteem, peer pressure, affluent, competitive parents and too much TV can lead to tragic consequences.

Parents attending the meeting, which was opened by PSO President, Nancy Sandell, were impressed by the erudition, insight and caring exhibited by the panel.

School superintendent-elect, Stephen E. Hart, gave an encompassing view of the Cohasset school system. He exp · ssed concern that some parents are unintention ·lly pressuring their children, worrying abou. vhich college they will get into when they're only in first grade.

·· Christine Collins summed up the general consensus of the evening when she said that children must be allowed develop at their own pace, they should not be able to read "in utero."

Several summer courses offered at SS Art Center

The South Shore Art Center will usher in the beginning of summer with several one week intensive art courses, two designed for adults and one for children.

These one-week workshops at the Center, 103 Ripley Road, allow students to concentrate on a particular area of art concentration. These workshops incorporate working outdoors weathering permitting. Advanced registration is required for all workshops at the Center.

Kicking off the month of June is a one week intensive watercolor workshop led by Virginia Avery, a face well recognized around the studios of the Center. Her workshop will meet daily from 9:30 a.m. to 12:30 p.m. Instruction will be geared around working effectively with watercolors through your own personal expression. Students will take advantage of the beautiful outdoors.

Judeth Van Hamm Wiers will lead a one week evening landscape painting course, June 23-26 and June 30 from 6:30 to 8:30 p.m. Designed for the intermediate and advanced painters, the course will concentrate on capturing that special late-day light found in June. Artists may use their own choice of medium although quick mediums are preferred.

For the young artist, there is a children art week at the beginning of summer vacation. Instructor Serena Brundige will meet daily with kids the week June 23 through June 27, 10:30 a.m. to noon. She will work out door on painting, drawing and mixed media projects.

For registration and information on these June workshops, call the South Shore Art Center.

Cohasset High School sports roundup . . .

By Lisa Shumaker
Mariner Correspondent

Last week four members of the sailing team represented Cohasset in the Mass. State Regatta held in Fall River. The four consisted of skippers Lisa Clinton and Bill Lean and crew Collin Studds and Dan Rossi.

Lisa and Collin had a fantastic day finishing first overall far out of the reach of the second place boat. Bill and Dan also sailed well and helped Cohasset to finish second overall with an impressive score.

Because of their high place finish in Fall River, the Sailors qualified for the New England Regatta which was held on Sunday at the prestigious Coast Guard Academy in Connecticut. Here Cohasset competed against world class competition.

Despite some stiff competition and rough weather conditions, Lisa and her crew Collin were able to finish third three times and ended up 5th overall. Bill and Dan turned in a good effort on Sunday as well, and Cohasset placed 10th overall in a talented fleet of 17.

These Sailors will now go back to their regular sailing schedule which will run well into June. Hopefully, the experience they gained in this regatta will help Cohasset to become a dominating force on the water.

Boys' Tennis

The tennis team had only one meet last week, but it was probably its most important competition of the season. Friday, the boys were able to pull out a tough victory over an extremely talented Scituate team, 3-2. Not only did this win boost Cohasset's record to 9-2, but it also thrust the Skippers into first place in the league. Cohasset now only needs two more victories in order to qualify for the state tournament.

Rich Reddick and Fred Wilshire at first and third singles were able to defeat their opponents handily. A win by Steve Meyers and Derick Lacks clinched this crucial victory for the team.

Coach Eddie Amaral was pleased with the victory and attributes his team's success to the steady play of Rich Reddick, Chris Ryan, and Fred Wilshire. Amaral also points out that his team also benefits from being able to rotate five players in and out of the doubles' positions. These five Steve Meyers, Jason Marsac, Derick Lacks, Greg Wallingford and Dan Farwell have all played very well and many times have come through in clutch situations with match winning victories.

Amaral also cited Cliff Scott, Frank Wilshire, and Wayne Warren Young as turning in good efforts when asked to do so.

Tuesday in a makeup match the boys once again face arch rival Scituate. Wednesday, Cohasset plays a tough Sandwich team, and Friday the boys take on Hanover.

Girls' Tennis

The girls started off a successful week by defeating Hanover 4-1. All the girls played well according to coach Sue Dalrymple.

Carolyn O'Brien and Jen Chapman were both victorious at second and third singles. Linda O'Laughlin and Katie Ryan along with Karin Anglin and Dionne Mascart also won their matches as well.

Friday, the girls traveled to East Bridgewater and demolished their opponent, 4-1. Dalrymple was especially pleased with this victory because East Bridgewater is the only girls' tennis team to have boys on it. Dalrymple felt her team adapted well to this new situation and was not intimidated.

Kerri Kirkendall, Carolyn O'Brien, and Jen Chapman all posted victories for the Skippers. The second doubles team consisting of Michelle Massa and Karin Anglin won as well.

Saturday, in the individual tournament held at Bridgewater State all of the girls who participated played exceptionally well against some tough competition. However, the doubles team of Katie Ryan and Dionne Mascart was the only Cohasset entry to qualify for the second round of competition. After an outstanding victory, Katie and Dionne just fell a little bit short in their second match.

The Skippers are now 7-5 and can lose only one more match if they want to keep their tournament hopes alive. Dalrymple knows her team has the ability to qualify for the tournament, but the next two weeks will be tough. Wednesday, the girls face Sandwich in a must win situation. Friday, the Skippers are tentatively scheduled to make up a meet against Rockland.

Boys' Baseball

The boys began the week with a tremendous victory over Whitman/Hanson 6-3. The key to this win was the outstanding pitching effort of Mike Gentile who only allowed one hit in his six innings of pitching. Mike's pitching combined with an airtight Cohasset defense which did not make a single error to give the Skippers their third victory in a row.

Unfortunately, the boys winning streak came to a disappointing end as they lost a close one to Hanover 6-5. The Skippers were up 5-0 following the top of the first inning. However, Cohasset shut down offensively after that and Hanover chipped away at the score driving in the winning run in the bottom of the seventh inning.

Wednesday, the boys play under the lights in Sandwich on Wednesday, and on Thursday they travel to East Bridgewater.

Seahawk Pee-Wees return from distant competition

Hingham and Seahawk Pee-Wees recently returned from an April hockey tour of Europe, where they played against teams in Germany and Italy. The boys, who are from Hingham, Hull, Scituate, and Marshfield won two and lost two games.

The tour took place during the midst of the recent terrorist attacks and while many similar tours were cancelled, the only noticeable indication of political turmoil was the nearly empty planes to and from Europe. The team was guarded while in the Munich Airport by heavily-armed military police as well as armored vehicles and two West German tanks. The team was advised not to expose its "Team U.S.A. Juniors" jackets and uniforms while within the passenger terminals. Once in the Bavarian villages though, the welcomes were most enthusiastic.

Besides playing the somewhat different European version of ice hockey, our team members, mostly 11 to 14 years old, were treated to tours of a Bavarian castle on an island, the world famous Deutsches Museum in Munich, and Hitler's infamous Dachau concentration camp, which, although grim, was an experience never to be forgotten. In Italy, the boys toured Venice. At the close of the hockey schedule, Don Willy of Hingham, the "Team U.S.A." coordinator took those who could ski to Innsbruck Austria, the ski capitol of the world, for a day on the glacier-capped mountains. The slopes are so tall, they have fresh new snow every day of the year. Most of those who skied had previously done so only in New England or when Mr. Willy had taken the Seahawk and Hingham Pee-Wees last winter to ski and skate in Quebec, Canada.

Did the boys enjoy themselves? Although the hotel in Austria had TV, no one ever had the time to turn it on! Plans have been recently confirmed, according to Mr. Willy, to form a team which will play in Geneva, Switzerland, Feb. 12 to 19, 1987, in Innsbruck and Vienna Austria, Feb. 1988, and in Moscow, USSR as soon as possible.

Players in the light jerseys are Team USA "Wolverines" from the South Shore. Their goalie is actually a German boy who substituted for the American player who cancelled his plans to play in Europe.

Cohasset girl honored during mother-daughter banquet

Derby Academy athletes in Grades 4-9 recently celebrated at the traditional Mother-Daughter and Father-Son Banquets, highlights of the spring term at the Hingham school.

The 50th annual Father-Son Banquet, April 29, opened with Grace spoken by ninth grader Timothy Noonan of Duxbury, Captain of this year's intramural Dark Team, who served as Master of Ceremonies throughout dinner in the John H. Ross Memorial Dining Room.

A week earlier, ninth grader Mary Erica Kolson of Scituate was Toastmistress for the Mother-Daughter Banquet. After dinner, the awards ceremony in Sarah Derby Hall was conducted by Athletic Director Anne J. Elwell (Mrs. William Elwell, Jr.) and coaches Janet Evans-Fuller (Mrs. Winship Fuller), Gayle Myers, and Judith Strott. Intramural Derby Captain Kerim Harold of Hingham, Topper Captain Kelly Combs of Cohasset, and Basketball Captain Gale Jancsics of Plymouth recounted their seasons, and awards were presented for each sport.

Varsity field hockey Captain Meg Spenlinhauer and Junior Varsity Captain Allison O'Neill, both of Hingham, received their captains' "D"s. Field hockey balls for most improved went to Varsity players Elizabeth Tobey of Hingham, Alice Babson of Plymouth, and Heather MacKenzie of Scituate, and to Junior Varsity players, Kate Shaughnessey and Elizabeth Reardon of Hingham

Greek Orthordox Church to celebrate fifth anniversary

By John O'Donnell
Mariner Staff

Panagia Greek Orthodox Church and Eastern Orthodox Churches all over the world celebrated Easter recently ,and parishioners of Panagia Church are preparing for another celebration.

"We'll be celebrating the fifth anniversary of the church June 7," said the Rev. John Maheras, pastor of the parish. "We're planning an anniversary banquet and dance."

The church, located in Cohasset, has 140 active families and 100 "less active" families, Fr. Maheras said. Parishioners come from all over the South Shore.

The church's first liturgy was celebrated on April 6, 1981, but the parish will wait until June 6 to celebrate its anniversary.

"We decided to wait until after Lent and the Holy Week celebrations," said Fr. Maheras. "We needed some time to rest and prepare."

There were services every evening during Holy Week. A candlelight service was celebrated on Holy Saturday, and an Agape service celebrating Christ's Resurrection was conducted on Easter Sunday.

Children from the Sunday School released white balloons in celebration of Easter. "We had a very exciting Holy Week," said Fr. Maheras. "The community is well grounded in its faith."

The Panagia community is a relatively young community according to Fr. Maheras. "Many in the parish have young families and are well established in their professional lives," he said.

"Many of their parents live in or near Boston," he said, "but our parishioners live in this area and feel an alliance with this church."

The parish was founded by a nucleus of 70 families who wanted a church on the South Shore, Fr. Maheras said. The closest Greek Orthodox Churches were in Boston, Brockton, Quincy and Hyannis until Panagia Church was established.

"The bishop felt there was a need for a parish in this area," Fr. Maheras said. "The people got together and acquired this church."

The parish acquired the Pope Church on Jerusalem Rd. The church was built in 1900, and was a Methodist church before the parish acquired it.

Panagia Church is named for the Virgin Mary. Panagia is the popular name for the Virgin Mary in Greek," Fr. Maheras said. "The full name is quite long and is a tongue twister, so people just say Panagia."

The parish is governed by an 11-member Board of Stewards. Christy Mihos is the current president of the board.

"The board along with me guide and direct the parish," Fr. Maheras said. "They are very important to the parish."

The parish women's group, Philoptochos, is very active, Fr. Maheras said. "They are the right hand of the community," he said. "Anything that has to be done, like getting flowers for the altar, cleaning, preparing Easter eggs for the children, is taken care of by Philoptochos."

The women's group helps to fund the Sunday School and conducts Sunday breakfasts. The president is Phyllis Barkas.

The parish also has a youth group, advised by Charles and Sharon Costas, and is establishing a Joy Group for younger children. There also is a Greek language school, conducted by Demetra Pappas, that meets every Saturday.

Fr. Maheras has been pastor at Panagia for about a year. He has served as a pastor in Manchester, N.H. and West Nyack, N.Y. before coming to Panagia.

Fr. Maheras and his wife Susan live in Scituate with their four daughters.

"The parish has had steady growth," said Fr. Maheras. "It has been rewarding to see so many people actively participate in the functions of the church."

Meeting House Campaign—Extend a warm welcome when your canvasser calls.

The Wine and Cheese at the Parish House and the dinners at various homes were attended by 124 persons. Thanks to Millie Mitman for organizing this delightful evening. Thanks also go to Tim and Lucy Marsac, Dave and Jackie Whipple, Win and Jean Burgess, John and Diana Kornet, Stu and Shelley Weier, Woody and JoAnne Chittick, Jim and Laurie Hamilton, Bob and Dottie Booth and Jack and Carol Martin for hosting this wonderful event.

The campaign is off to a tremendous start. The church already has $64,105 in hand for the campaign and $7,100 for the Canvass totalling over $70,000.
Annual Meeting—of the Parish will be held Wednesday, June 11, at 8 p.m. in Trueblood Hall.

(All committee chairmen should forward their reports to the church office as soon as possible.)
Support Coming of Age Group—Three cheers for 3 members of the Coming of Age class Suzanne DeCruz, Juliana Chittick and Colin Studds!!! They walked 10 miles (in the pouring rain) to raise money for the Protestant Social Service Bureau, which is a church-sponsored agency serving people of all faiths. It carries on programs in marriage and family counseling, foster care and is an adoption agency serving all southeastern Massachusetts.

These young people undertook this walk as part of their 20-hour community service requirement for the Coming of Age Program. Sponsors are needed to support them in their generous and exhausting effort.

Call the church office to indicate a donation ($1 per mile would be terrific!) for one or all of the walkers.

Second Congregational

The best times to reach him at the church will be from 9 a.m. to 1 p.m. Tuesdays and Fridays, as he will be making pastoral calls in the afternoons. Though he is living in Sharon, you are urged to contact him at home in any sort of emergency situation. His telephone number in Sharon is 784-2274.
Choir Notes—Sunday music will include "Lovely Appear Over the Mountains the Feet of Them that Preach and Bring Good News of Peace" by Mendelssohn; also, "He's Everything to Me" will be sung as a duet by two mothers.
Youth Group—is sponsoring a 50's dance Friday night, climbing Mt. Monadnock May 18, and will wash your car during church on May 25. May 31-June 1 is the date of their overnight bike trip on Cape Cod.
Search Committee—The early return of so many questionnaires is very encouraging to the committee. If anyone needs extra copies, contact a member of the committee or call the church office. All questionnaires should be returned by Sunday, May 11. A special thank you to our "artist in residence" Matt Silvia for painting the deposit box for the forms which is by the front entrance of the church.
Night at the Pops—Please call Carol Sandblom, 383-1812, to make reservations for the Pops. Tickets are: $31/seat or $150 table (for 5); $24/seat or $115 table (for 5); First balcony: $21 or $18; Second Balcony: $13 or $10.

She is presently a member of the School's 150th Reunion Celebration which is scheduled for 1990. It will honor the founding of the Bridgewater campus.

Recreation Department to offer dog obedience classes

The Cohasset Recreation Department will offer three levels of instruction for Dog Obedience Classes to be taught by Ms. Laurie Ann Cleveland. All classes will be held on Cohasset Common, and will begin Thursday evening, June 12, Beginner class will be at 6:30 p.m., Thursdays, Intermediates-/Advanced Class will be held at 7:30 p.m., Thursdays.

The purpose of beginner classes will be to teach novice pet owners basic obedience and responsible pet ownership. Subjects to be covered are proper use of voice corrections, stay commands, getting the dog to come, heel, etc. Helpful hints on ownership and responsibility will also be included. The obedience will include those exercises beneficial to the pet owner as well as those thinking about eventually showing their dogs in obedience. The Intermediate/advanced class is designed for dogs that have completed the Recreation Department Beginner class.

For the above classes owners are required to have their dogs equipped with a humane choke chain. The proper size of the chain is determined by measuring the dog's neck an adding 4 inches. Absolutely no spike collars allowed!! It is also strongly suggested that the handlers wear comfortable shoes and clothes for this session. For all classes: The fee is $17 per dog for the eight week, one hour per week program. Dogs should be a minimum of 3 months of age, and there is no limit on maximum age.

To register please call The Recreation Department office at 383-6791.

Homeless director addresses Coop 6

Sister Debbie of the Congregation of St. Joseph and director of volunteers at the Long Island Shelter for the Homeless, last week addressed a business meeting of COOP 6, an organization comprised of six area Democratic town committees.

Sister Debbie spoke of the need the shelter has for such things as toothpaste, combs, underwear, blankets, towels, sheets, hair tonic, toothbrushes (they are often given donations of used toothbrushes) and clothing. They also would appreciate donations of furniture, and welcome volunteers who will paint, do carpentry or perform other tasks that will make life more bearable for the shelter's 350 guests.

The greatest need is for "food groups," who will prepare meals for the guests and serve them and take the time to talk to them — letting them know that there are people who care.

If you would like to be involved, or if you want further information, please call Jackie Leach at 545-5087.

Teenage suicide worries South Shore educators

By Don Merrill
Mariner Staff

Complex factors have contributed to spiraling suicide rates among teenagers.

For them, life today is harder than it used to be on teens of previous generations because there's less structure in their lives.

Adults — parents, educators, other authority figures — are unwitting contributors to the problem because of denial of the finality of suicide.

"Everybody, including staff people here at the hospital, deny how serious this is and don't want to deal with such a tough problem," said John O'Brien, Ed. D., director of the Plymouth-based Cove Counseling Services.

O'Brien joined Pembroke Hospital staff psychologists and psychiatrists last Friday in a seminar about the problem of suicide among young people and what types of therapies are available to troubled adolescents.

Neary 80 teachers, educators and social workers attended the four-hour workshop.

O'Brien said the high attendance is indicative of concern about the growing problem on the part of both parents and school officials.

"Teen suicide has been properly labeled as a national epidemic," he said.

The conference was held to give people who deal with adolescents on a daily basis "a greater appreciation for the real complexity of the problem and what we can do about it," said Dr. Paul Cotton, Pembroke Hospital medical director.

"The point you must get through is that suicide is final — it means death, and there's no changing that," he said.

An attempt every minute

"A suicide is attempted every minute in the U.S., and more than 70 will be successful. There are 25,000 to 35,000 known suicides each year, but that may only be a portion of the problem."

At least as many "accidents" involve suicidal behavior that is never reported as such. These include injuries and auto accidents, O'Brien said.

"Outside motor-vehicle accidents, suicide is the number one killer of teens today."

Pembroke Hospital alone has admitted more than 2,000 patients, mostly young, in the two years since it opened on Oak Street, Cotton said.

The age at which suicide is most likely seems to be 18 but "continues to get younger and younger," O'Brien said.

Suicide attempts have increased in recent decades because of social changes. O'Brien said teens are under less supervision from their families, giving them more opportunity.

"Thirty years ago, you had at least one parent, and maybe a grandparent, living in the home," O'Brien said. "That gives structure to one's life. Today, grandparents aren't around, and both parents are working."

Teens today also face higher expectations, which produces lower self-esteem. They are more responsible for the choices they make; decisions that teens of earlier generations never had to face, such as substance use, sex and other issues of increasing sophistication.

Moral values in society have also changed, and thoughts of suicide are no longer taboo, O'Brien said.

'I need help'

O'Brien listed several of the myths surrounding suicide attempts, especially by teens.

According to one, suicide occurs without warning, as in the case of the seemingly bright, happy, popular and well-adjusted teenager.

However, eight of ten teens who attempt suicide talk about ending their lives — or otherwise harming themselves — before they do it, O'Brien said.

Most of the time, the person who may be suicidal exhibits no symptoms of psychosis, making it a very subtle problem, he said.

"Most aren't suffering from apparent or permanent psychosis.

"We need to take it seriously every time a teenager talks about harming himself. The myth that those who talk about it won't do it is wrong."

Those who attempt suicide are not sincere about wanting to die, it's a cry for help, O'Brien said.

Those who have exhibited suicidal behavior are not necessarily "suicidal forever," he said. The average crisis will last several weeks, but does not preclude the possibility of becoming a normally-adjusted adult.

Perhaps the most dangerous myth is believing a crisis to be over once the patient's outlook improves, which occurs two to four days after an attempt.

Although the patient seemingly "brightens up," the danger of a successful suicide is greatest within three months after an initial attempt.

"The patient has a tremendous support network right after an attempt, but that begins to dissipate after two or four days," O'Brien said. "An adolescent can confuse that privacy for abandonment," sinking him even further into depression.

Suicide does not run in families, but depression is known to be inherited through heredity, he said.

There is one major difference between male and female suicidal behavior, he said. Boys tend to do it without "gesturing" apparent suicidal behavior, while girls will usually give plenty of signals before an attempt, O'Brien said.

This, coupled with the fact that males use more deadly methods in an attempt, is why many times more boys than girls complete suicide successfully.

FROM THE KITCHEN

by JOAN PINKHAM

Dining out in Majorca & tasty political snacks

Where and what to eat and trying out the native fare gives an added dimension to one's vacation fun.

Margy Littell and Priscilla Green spent the winter on Majorca, or, as the natives call it, "Mallorca" and they brought back this clipping from the local paper which they thought we'd all find amusing.

"The north-west side of the island, near the fields close to La Albufera, is a little village called Sa Pobla, where the soil is fertile and the field rats in abundance.

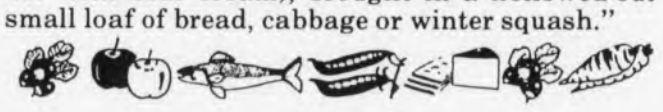
"For the culinary-minded tourist the following recipe might be a little too much for a dinner back home. The recipe is taken from a Mallorcan cookbook.

"We skip the problem of catching the main ingredient and concentrate only on the cooking of it."

Then, comes the recipe and we'll skip that, too, for it is entitled "Fried Rats" and is said to be typical of a Sa Pobla dish.

Priscilla says native broiled squid is more to their liking, as well as their native soups and crisp salad vegetables. Wonder if the Spaniards would find this clipping from our "Women's Day" magazine more appealing than theirs seems to us.

It reads: "With our native veggies, picnic fare might include a simple dip (spinach, herb or cucumber with sour cream); brought in a hollowed-out small loaf of bread, cabbage or winter squash."



Sharing a meal is supposed to be a pleasant occasion—not only the food, but the conversation should be palatable. Dinner talk should skirt the subjects of politics and religion, but that taboo was thrown to the winds during Marshfield's town elections when Republican Town Committee poll workers at the South River School served dinner to the Democratic Town Committee members.

Doris Ewart made a tuna noodle casserole, Barbara Carney, chicken casserole, Esther Bartlett, baked beans, Ruth Colby, tossed salad and Hazel Schlatter, a cream cheese cherry pie and chocolate cake. Even Greg Brilliant, the school custodian, got into the act and won the hearts of all by doing the dishes and tidying up.

On her last trip to California, B.J. Babcock returned with this recipe which may be served as an appetizer, garnish for soups, or tasty snack. For want of a title, let's just call it

B.J.'S SNACK

Mix a scant
1/2 c. salad oil with
1 pkg. Creamy Herb Hidden Valley Ranch Salad Dressing
In a large bowl, stir in 1 box of oyster crackers ("Sunshine" are the best says B.J.)
and that's it!
soak up the dressing and absorb the flavor. Keep in a tin box—only be sure to hide the box away from the family.

In his travels, Ron Chapman brought back a cookbook from his native Scotland. Called "A Taste of Scotland" by Theodora Fitzgibbon, it offers ways to make foods we too, enjoy, such as oatcakes, Dundee marmalade, potato scones and Dundee fruit cake which is said to keep for months in a tin. Creamy oatmeal soup features milk, onions, cream, chicken stock and, of course, oatmeal. What caught my eye was a recipe that would be good to make for a picnic and called

SCOTS EGGS

10 eggs, 8 hard-boiled
1 1/2lb. pork sausage meat
Mace, salt and pepper to taste
1 c. bread crumbs
Deep oil for frying

Boil eight eggs for 10 min. Drain and let them cool by running under cold water. Peel. Beat up one of the remaining eggs and add a tablespoon of cold water. Dip eggs into beaten egg and cover each one with sausage, pressing it on with hands. Beat up the remaining egg and gently roll them in this. Then dip them in bread crumbs, again pressing crumbs into sausage meat.

Have the oil good and hot and fry them singly until outside is golden. Lift up with the basket and drain well before serving either with mustard or cold with a chopped raw apple and celery salad.

ANGLER'S CORNER

by Bill Smith

Shad, the poor man's salmon

The American shad, formerly known as Alosa Sapidissima, is the major game fish sought by local anglers during this time of year. These fish, often referred to as "the poor man's salmon," are noted for their long runs which challenge the most seasoned angler and provide great sport for all.

Locally, shad are predictable in their spawning habits and their availability to anglers. The North and South Rivers in southeastern Massachusetts provide some of the greatest sport fishing for this species. Anglers from throughout New England and the Mid-Atlantic states migrate to these rivers as the shad begin their spawning run. These local rivers have been the scene of world record catches, including one by this author on two pound test line.

Angling pressure on the shad can be extreme and often unproductive. Anglers who understand the shad and their spawning runs will have a distinct advantage.

Environmental conditions, particularly water flow and water temperature, trigger the migration of shad into the North and South Rivers to spawn.

Shad prefer water temperatures between 48 and 58 degrees. The lower temperature usually occurs by mid-April.

During this early part of the run the fish are often sluggist and erratic.

Since the temperature of the North and South Rivers is influenced by the daily temperature and rainfall rather than underwater springs, waterfalls or tributaries, shad fishing may peak as early as mid-May or as late as June.

North River shad seem to become more aggressive when the water warms to 50 degrees. Fly fishermen do better when the water temperature approaches 55 degrees.

These brackish spawning fish are not feeding, and must be enticed to take your lure. Shad strike out of territorial instinct and defensiveness. However, they are curious and aggressive.

Thus, there is no need to match the hatch or offer them a lure that resembles a bait fish. Shad darts are the predominant lure used by anglers. These are small lead head jigs fished at a slow retrieve. Brightly colored shad streamers are equally effective for the fly fisherman. Shad often pick these lures up to get them out of their way.

Shad lack a sophisticated air bladder and must move continuously to bring in air and survive. For this reason, they provide excellent sport, often making charging runs which challenge skill and tackle. Tackle need not be expensive, but it must be quick and responsive.

I recommend a 4½ to 5½ foot light action rod and matching reel capable of holding at least 150 yards of two to six pound test line. Fly rod fishermen will do well with an eight to 8½ foot seven weight rod. Be sure your fly reel is loaded with backing since shad strip line very rapidly.

The more the angler learns about the rivers and the shad itself, the more consistent his results will be. The best way to learn the rivers is to explore them — walk them, wade them or canoe them.

Adams Bait and Tackle on Route 139 in Pembroke is sponsoring its annual Shad Derby. Fish can be weighed in daily. The staff provides expert assistance to all anglers. Call their fishing hotline at 826-8342 for further information.

(Author Bill Smith, known locally by his nickname Grizzly, is a former (line class) world record-holder and owner of Adams Bait and Tackle on Route 139 in Pembroke.)

Politicus — by David A. Mittell, Jr.

Questions for Transportation Sec. Fred Salvucci

I was both amused and troubled to observe that when in the last year both I and my colleague Darrell Berger offended the sensibilities of certain of the local clergy with damnable ideas (his a Unitarian view of the meaning of "born again," mine a reactionary view of the A.I.D.S. menace) the common offering of the offended men of God was an exhortation to our publisher to expunge us from his publishing consortium.

In a few cases their message was a representation to the effect: ". . . golly, I disagree with these fellows and I'd like you to hear my opposing view. . . ." But in too many other cases it was to the effect: ". . . how dare you continue to publish such tripe . . . the bull-slinger Berger [as the born again urged] and the malevolent Mittell [as the born knowing urged] must be suppressed. . . ."

I go into the clergy's manifest illiberalism because, as I have come to appreciate, whatever one thinks of the Mike Dukakis flock (and I've thought some things) they have a common quality that sets them apart from both our common clergy and our common politicians in a quite uncommon way: When one assaults their sensibilities with doubts about their divine right to be right, instead of demanding of our beleaguered publisher that we be journalistically Guillotined, Dukakis types pick up the telephone and say, as it is said in the Book of Isaiah, ". . . come, let us reason together. . . ."

Of no one is this more true than Frederick Salvucci, Massachusetts' Sec. of Transportation, a bloke whose wisdom has been sorely doubted in this space. But your reporter's probably unjust dessert for habitually doubting the essence of Salvucci's life's work was a personal interview arranged through the gracious effort of Rep. Frank Hynes—another Dukakophile given to the civilized exchange of warring ideas.

On my own initiative I submitted my questions to Salvucci in advance, for most of them I've carried on the tip of my tongue for from two to twenty years. These are the questions Salvucci got with his choc-fulla-nuts one recent morning. His answers will be published next week. The questions:

1. Given all the things I've written about you, how come you're willing to meet with me? Are you quite certain about your health?

2. Regarding Central Artery Depression: Why an interstate through Downtown Boston? Isn't this what Frank Sargent correctly decided we didn't need or want? Won't it just encourage north-south traffic and bring demands for a greater road next generation? Won't it effectively use up our transportation construction dollars for this decade and serve to delay or prevent needed transportation projects in other parts of the state? Couldn't the Artery be removed much more cheaply if we: (a) built the Third Harbor Tunnel; (b) built direct Logan access to 95 north and possibly 93 north in Chelsea Creek area; (c) razed the Central Artery; and (d) replaced it with a street-level road on the scale of 2nd and 3rd Avenues in New York, separated by a mall after the fashion of Commonwealth Ave?

3. Regarding South Shore and other commuter rail: Where is the master plan in which South Shore Commuter rail fits? Why are we not investigating extended service to Fall River, New Bedford, and Cape Cod? Why are we not investigating 79 m.p.h. service as opposed to 60 m.p.h. service? Why are we not investigating the possibility of future service on other former branches, for instance to Pemberton, Rockland/Hanover, Marshfield/ Duxbury, Whitman/ East Bridgewater, and Randolph. Who will run future service and how will we avoid an idiotic strike based on issues in a faraway state that only lately joined the Union? What about food service, conference cars, cellular phones? Are we really planning for the future?

4. Why did Gov. Dukakis take over a month to publicly involve himself in the above-said idiotic strike? How come he had time in the interim to appear on Spencer-for-Hire and at Sen. Bulger's St. Patrick's Day bash?

5. Regarding Amtrak: Why alone among major Amtrak states does Massachusetts not promote service under rule 403-b? What about service north of Springfield to Northampton and Greenfield? What about service on the Providence & Worcester Railroad? The P&W passenger fleet is still running on excursions . . . what about the state subsidizing a renewed "Shoreliner" in Worcester County using that fleet?

6. Regarding other rail questions: What about Conrail's plan to remove the second set of tracks between Framingham and Albany? The commuter rail fleet sits underutilized on weekends . . . what about weekend trains across the state, for instance to the Berkshires and Williamstown? The old "Flying Yankee" rests at Edaville Railroad . . . what about rehabbing it for future service to the Cape or Berkshires?

7. What about landbanking of old rail rights-of-way? Shouldn't state government at least acquire easements and forbid future building on all former rights-of-way? How's the bike path program going? When can we expect a ribbon cutting?

8. What about moving this end of the International Ferry from Portland to Boston? Why not run it right up the Fort Point Channel so as to connect with Amtrak?

9. What about bus service? In my neighborhood buses still follow old trolley lines that were laid out in the gaslight era. What about service that expresses from Boston directly to individual towns? Why is the Plymouth and Brockton so slow to change with the times? Would they benefit from some competiton? What about abolishing their franchise?

10. What about the South Weymouth Naval Air Station if the Navy should decide to close it? Wouldn't it benefit Southeastern Massachusetts economically as a small commercial airport?

11. What about widening Rte. 3? What about those interchanges, especially Rte. 53 at Hanover Mall and Rte. 139 in Pembroke? What about another access road to serve Marshfield? What about the east-west roads in Plymouth County . . . 44, 139, 228, etc. What about Rte. 18, especially in Weymouth?

12. What about bringing the Braves back to Boston? Can't we at least agree on that?

Thank you, D.A. Mittell.

'The Rainmaker' opens at Nickerson

"The Rainmaker," N. Richard Nash's romantic comedy, opened at the Nickerson Theatre, Norwell, for a five-week run, through June 14.

Lizzie Curry, a woman in a man's world, ultimately finds renewal when Starbuck reveals the importance of hope and the value of her own dreams. These characters were portrayed in the film version of "The Rainmaker" by Burt Lancaster and Katharine Hepburn.

"The Rainmaker" is the final production of the 1985-86 subscription series at the Nickerson Theatre. Performances Tuesday through Thursday are at 8 p.m.; Fridays at 8:30 p.m.; Saturdays at 4 p.m. and 8:30 p.m. Sundays at 2 p.m. and 7 p.m.

For telephone reservations, call (617) 871-2400. For mail orders or a brochure, write the Nickerson Theatre, 30 Accord Park Drive, P.O. box 272, Norwell, MA. 02018.

Currently, the Nickerson Theatre is conducting its subscription drive for the 1986-87 season, with seven plays, including two musicals announced. Norwell's professional theatre company, now producing year-round, will launch its summer season with the lively musical, "Tintypes" opening July 18, and continuing through August 30.

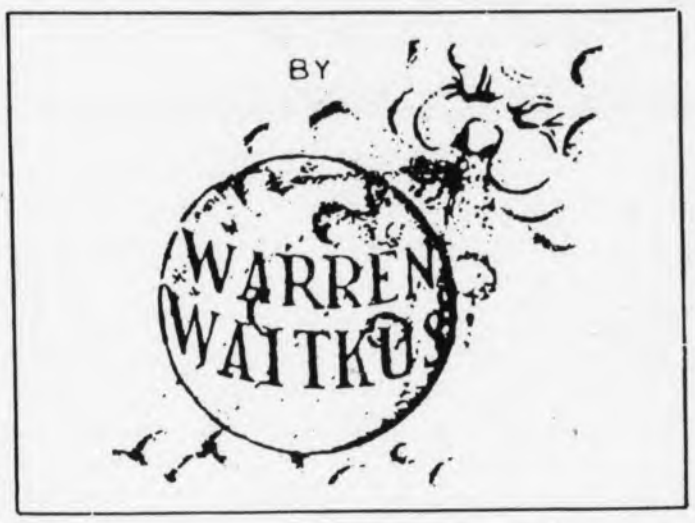
The World of Weather: Bloomin' May

The month of May is witness to the departing cold and gray of winter. Colorful flowers bloom and leaves appear on trees that have been barren and grotesque for several months.

The greening of the countryside is only one of the bountiful gifts of May. The lengthening of daylight hours and rising average temperatures, lift our spirits and renew our dreams of summer.

Most of the precipitation we receive during May is the result of gentle showers, and often majestic and frightening thunderstorms. But we can still experience powerful "Northeasters" tracking along the coast lashing us with gale force winds and driving rain.

The new moon will occur May 8 at 5:10 p.m. with the full "Flower" moon occurring at 3:46 p.m. May 23. The moon will be at apogee (the point in its orbit which is farthest from the earth) on the 10 and it will be at perigee (closest to the earth) on the 23. The same day it is full. While looking heavenward, this month will allow a last faint glimpse of Halley's Comet before it fades into the darkness of outerspace. It will not return again until the year 2061.



FOG ACCIDENTS

There was an unusual amount of fog during April and the last five days, at times, had heavy fog with visibility a quarter mile or less. When people think of fog related accidents they often associate these incidents with ocean tragedies only. But in fact some disasterous fog related accidents have occurred on our nation's highways.

A chain-reaction crash of 21 vehicles occurred in fog at 8 a.m. November 29 on the New Jersey Turnpike between Camden and the Delaware Memorial Bridge.

A propane truck jackknifed and was struck by a trailer truck while autos plowed into the blazing wreckage. Six people were killed and 17 others injured, many seriously.

Multiple collisions involving over 100 vehicles occurred on a fog blanketed stretch of the Santa Ana Freeway southest of Los Angeles, California December 15, 1969. Most were rear-end crashes with no fatalities.

Once again, on the New Jersey Turnpike near the Meadowlands Stadium, sixty-five vehicles collided on October 24, 1973 killing nine people and injuring 40 others. The visibility was zero with the smoke from a nearby fire mixing with the fog.

November 10, 1980 two dozen vehicles including eight tractor trailers piled up on Interstate Highway 15 near San Bernadino, California. Seven persons died and nearly two-hundred were injured in the fog-shrouded fiery collisions.

When the moist embrace of dense fog caresses our highways please exercise caution when driving, walking or jogging.

APRIL SUMMARY

April saw below normal temperature and precipitation with a most unusual wind regime. The predominate wind direction on 18 days was from the southeast to northeast direction bringing cold, raw ocean air to chill our bones.

The month began warm with the highest temperature occurring on the first then ended with a lingering northeast storm. Although this storm pestered us it did not bring large amounts of rain.

Total precipitation at my station in Marshfield was 2.34 inches, 1.21 inches below normal. There was no snowfall recorded. The maximum 24-hour rainfall was only .59 inches April 21. Rain .01 inch or more occurred on 15 days with a trace on one day. Total precipitation this year has been 15.94 inches 1.55 inches above normal.

The mean temperature was 44 degrees 3.1 degrees below normal thanks to abundant cloudiness and persistant ocean winds. The average daily maximum reading was 52.3 degrees while the average daily minimum was 35.6 degrees. The low temperature for the month was 22 degrees on April 12 with a high reading of only 68 degrees April 1.

There were four clear days, fifteen partly cloudy days and eleven cloudy days. The average wind speed was 12.9 mph, normal is 13.5 mph. The highest observed gust was 46 mph April 18.

The normal heating season is from Sept. 1 to May 23, only three percent of the heating year remains.

Next month I will bring you the National Weather Service's summer outlook and the 1986 Hurricane Season prediction of professor William Gray of Colorado State University.

Have a good day and a nice forever.

The term was used by the Dutch in New York for English settlers in Connecticut.

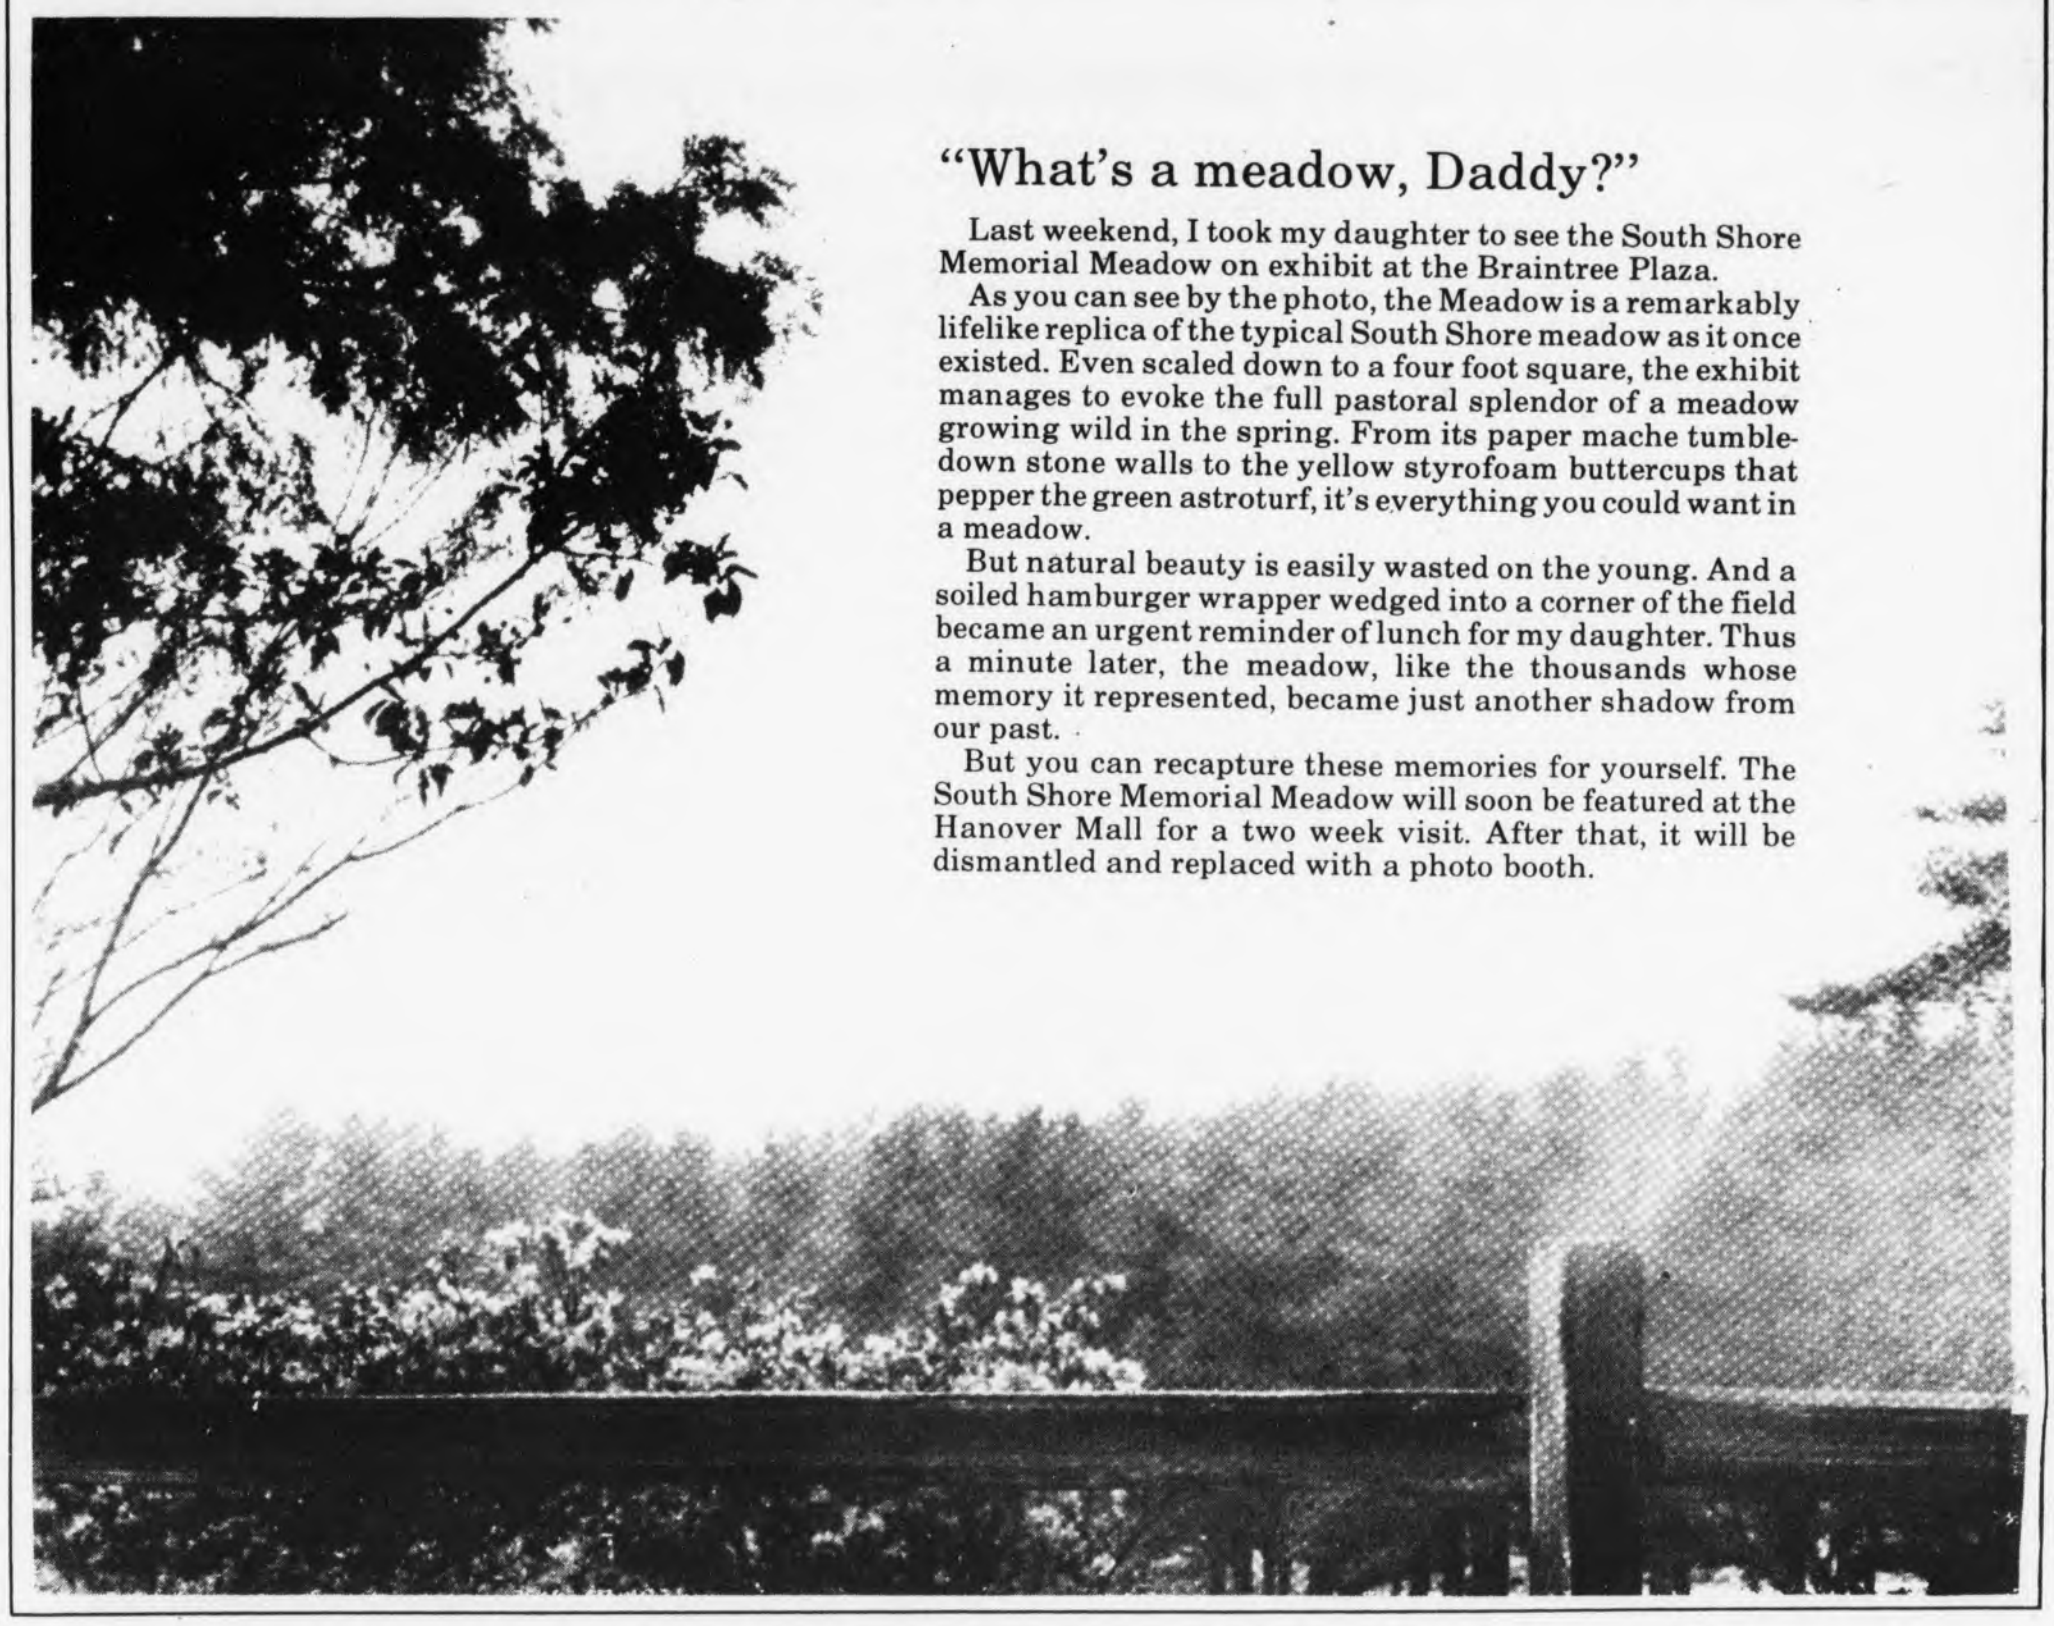
A Stone's Throw — by Paul Steven Stone



"What's a meadow, Daddy?"

Last weekend, I took my daughter to see the South Shore Memorial Meadow on exhibit at the Braintree Plaza.

As you can see by the photo, the Meadow is a remarkably lifelike replica of the typical South Shore meadow as it once existed. Even scaled down to a four foot square, the exhibit manages to evoke the full pastoral splendor of a meadow growing wild in the spring. From its paper mache tumble-down stone walls to the yellow styrofoam buttercups that pepper the green astroturf, it's everything you could want in a meadow.

But natural beauty is easily wasted on the young. And a soiled hamburger wrapper wedged into a corner of the field became an urgent reminder of lunch for my daughter. Thus a minute later, the meadow, like the thousands whose memory it represented, became just another shadow from our past.

But you can recapture these memories for yourself. The South Shore Memorial Meadow will soon be featured at the Hanover Mall for a two week visit. After that, it will be dismantled and replaced with a photo booth.

United Way finds working poor homeless & hungry

Poverty and family problems are the most important issues facing the 81 communities served by the United Way of Massachusetts Bay, according to two recently published reports.

Both studies are being used by the United Way as guides to responding to the 1.3 million people in need served by the area's largest charitable organization.

One study, by the Brighton marketing and research consulting firm of Dowgiallo & Associates, points out that hunger, homelessness, and family problems abound not only in Boston, but also in the surrounding suburbs.

The working poor are increasingly joining the ranks of hungry and homeless people, according to the report, which cites local studies. In Boston alone, the demand for emergency food assistance increased 65 percent in 1985, as did the number of families seeking it. Of the 8,000 to 10,000 homeless in Massachusetts, 10 to 20 percent cannot find shelters at night.

Dowgiallo noted last year, United Way's response to the hunger and homeless problems included distributing $3 million to 59 agencies and $75,000 in emergency grants to both affiliated and non-affiliated agencies.

Family problems, including teen drug and alcohol abuse, suicide, and pregnancy; child abuse/neglect; day care; domestic battery; and elderly care are a result of changing values and roles that place "tremendous pressure on the family," according to the report.

Eighty-three percent of Massachusetts high schoolers say it is easy to obtain marijuana, and 46 percent say it is easy to obtain cocaine, the report said. "Teen substance abuse, suicide, and the rising rate of teen pregnancy are signs that a number of families, even the very affluent, experience severe problems," it added.

The Dowgiallo report echoes the results of a survey conducted by the United Community Planning Corporation (UCPC).

The 928 persons interviewed, who were chosen randomly and as a representative sample in Massachusetts Bay, ranked the following as the most important issues facing their comunities: survival services (food and shelter), abuse of children and women, elderly abuse and care, health services, day care and family counseling.

The majority of respondents also said that the United Way's chief function other than fund raising should be to evaluate the performance of the agencies it supports. United Way reports that it does that through its citizen-review process, in which volunteers decide how United Way's money should be spent.

Among United Way's priority funding areas are food and shelter; protective services for children, women and the elderly; day care and home-based health care.

In addition, United Way's newly created Teen Services Initiative will target $700,000 within two years to affiliated and non-affiliated agencies which help troubled youth.

Take the law to heart.

The Dragon's Dungeon — By Claire McDonough

Play it safe - Throw some salt over your shoulder

"Oh no!" Breida moaned. "I broke the rear view mirror in my car. I'm in deep trouble for the next seven years. To say nothing of next inspection time."

"That," Skip informed her, "is rank superstition. Your mirror does not control your future. Unless you don't get it fixed, and you get in an accident, and you're not wearing your seatbelt, and you get fined $30, and you don't have it, so you get sent to jail, and your life is ruined."

"Breida always wears her seatbelt," I said. "But I do agree with Skip. Superstition is ridiculous, and I don't want to hear that kind of talk in the house. It brings bad luck."

I hoped they didn't see me knock on wood.

Breida sighed. "Everyone makes fun of other people's superstitions. But everyone has his own myths and legends to turn to when the going gets tough."

"No way," Skip told her. "Not me."

"Oh no? Then how come," she asked, "do you face the wall and hum the theme from "Rocky" before every wrestling match?"

"To get myself psyched," he replied. "It has nothing to do with superstition. But I could hardly expect you to understand that, could I?"

"And then," Breida continued, "there's Ma. She tells us not to be superstitious, but not only did she say, 'It's bad luck' when she told us not to say superstitious things, I actually saw her knock on wood."

"You did not," I denied. "I was brushing some dust off the table."

She looked at me skeptically.

"Then please explain the rules you have on your commuter van. As I understand it, you won't let anyone say, 'We're making good time' because it angers the volcano god."

"That's completely untrue," I replied hotly. "It's a known scientific fact that saying 'we're making good time' causes traffic lights to turn ted, creates traffic jams and makes trucks filled with hazardous waste break down in front of you. The other day Tom Gorman said, 'We're making good time' and immediately a killer 18-wheeler backed up at us and tried to destroy us all. The volcano god had nothing to do with it. There's no superstition involved."

"Right," Patrick interjected. "And speaking of Tom Gorman, how come he's not allowed to say anything about the Fore River Bridge?"

"That," I responded, "is also scientific. We have empirical evidence that Tom has psychokenetic power over that bridge.

"The very first day he rode the van he asked if the bridge ever goes up when we want to cross it. Just as he said the words, up it went."

Patrick sneered. "Coincidence."

I shook my head.

"Last Thursday everyone was griping about the foggy, rainy weather, and when Tom got on the van he said, 'I'm so mad it makes me want to say "bridge, bridge, bridge." ' Guess what happened when we got to the Fore River?"

Patrick's voice faltered, but he continues bravely.

"Coincidence?" he suggested.

"Not a chance," I replied. "Once is coincidence. Twice is a trend. Would you care to be on the van when we try for three in a row?"

"Not really. There are some things man was not meant to know. But I still think you're overreacting. I'll admit the bridge thing is pretty spooky, but yesterday's superstitions are explained by today's science. For example, people used to think that witches called up thunderstorms to turn milk sour. Now we know that there's an element in the atmosphere during electrical storms that can actually sour milk."

"Sure," I muttered. "And the witches put it there."

We were all startled when the Dragon looked up from his newspaper and roared.

"I'm getting pretty sick of all this talk about superstition. Breida is not going to have seven years of bad luck. Humming the theme from Rocky did not improve Skip's driving. Tom Gorman does not have mystical powers over bridges. And the reason our milk turns sour is because you leave it out of the refrigerator instead of putting it away. Now let's discontinue this discussion."

"You're right,' I said humbly. "We won't talk like that any more."

I waited till he was reading again, then I whispered, "The volcano god could be listening, and he'd really be ticked off."

'Evita' needs charisma & precision

By Judith Montminy

THEATRE REVIEW

After Tuesday night's performance (considered a preview by the producers) of "Evita," a staff person at the South Shore Performing Arts Center asked a theatre-goer if she enjoyed the show.

"The sound could have been better," the theatre-goer said. Then she added, "It was all very disappointing."

She was right, If she had been expecting a community theatre production of "Evita," she would have been "Wowed!"

But the "Evita" that played at the Stoughton theatre (May 5 - May 11) was supposed to be a professional production. (At least two members of the cast, Timothy Johnson and Jeanne Jones, are known to South Shore audiences for their work in community theatre).

Even taking into consideration that this reviewer saw a preview of the National Theatre Guild's production, it's hard to imagine that two more days of performances would give the play what it desperately needs: charisma and precision.

Eva Peron, the wife of the Argentinian director Juan Peron, had both. She captivated a country. She was the power behind the throne and helped mastermind Peron' s meteoric rise to power. She was adored by "the people" with whom she identified. She was their "Evita."

The Tim Rice and Andrew Lloyd Webber musical follows Eva's career from her impoverished beginnings as a promiscuous actress to her role as wife of the nation's dictator and head of a national "charity" foundation.

Using the style of "Jesus Christ Superstar," the musical "Evita" cuts from scene to scene, focussing on the real people behind the public personae.

Under Michael David's direction, the crowd scenes are particularly well-staged. The tableaux remind us of the impact the play is supposed to have—unfortunately, the impact is not intensified by the principal players.

Elizabeth Beskin has the vocal range for the extremely difficult score given to Eva, but she doesn't have the magnetism of a person who could turn the heads of a nation.

The popular ballad, "Don't Cry for me Argentina" was not a show stopper.

As Peron, D.C. Allen does fine as a loving husband, but lacks the ruthless edge of a dictator of Juan Peron's reputation.

Thomas Reiter as Che, however, the one who comments on what goes on and is the conscience of the play, is pointed and alive. He's sharp. He does better with the ballads than with the syncopated music, but he remains strong and central throughout. He commands the audience's attention and deserves it.

The National Theatre Guild's production was headed to Portsmouth, NH after playing one week at the South Shore Performing Arts Center in Stoughton Center.

"Evita" is the third and final production at the South Shore Performing Arts Center this season. An announcement of next season's plays is expected shortly and the season will begin in the fall of 1986. The fare will include popular comedies and musicals.

PRAYER TO THE HOLY SPIRIT: Oh Holy St. Spirit, thru who are all knowing, who brightens every path that I may reach my ideal, who giveth me the divine gift of forgiving wrongs done unto me and in every instant of my life are with me. I'd like in this dialogue to affirm my gratitude for all your blessing and reaffirm once again that I'd never want to part from thee and all my loved ones in perpetual grace. Thank you for your mercy on me and mine. Person should pray 3 consecutive days without revealing petition. Within 3 days grace will be attained regardless of how difficult the petition may be. Publish this prayer immediately. J.P.C. (5/14)

SAINT JUDE'S NOVENA. May the Sacred Heart of Jesus be adored, glorified, loved and preserved throughout the world now and forever. Sacred Heart of Jesus, pray for us. And St. Jude, the Worker of Miracles, pray for us. St. Jude, Helper of the hopeless, pray for us. Say this prayer nine times a day and by the eighth day your prayer will be answered. This prayer has never been known to fail. Publication promised. My prayers have been answered. A.C. (5/14)

FOR SICK RELATIVES and Friends. O great St. Peregrine,* you who have been called "The Mighty," "The Wonder-Worker" because of the numerous miracles which you have obtained from God * for those who have bad recourse to you, * you who for so many years * bore in your own flesh this cancerous disease * that destroys the very fiber of our being , * and who had recourse to the source of all grace * when the power of man could do no more, * you who were favored with the vision of Jesus * coming down from His Cross to heal your affliction, * ask of God and Our Lady, * the cure of these sick persons whom we entrust to you. * (Pause here and silently recall the names of the sick persons for whom you are praying.) Aided in this way by your powerful intercession, * we shall sing to God, * now and for all eternity, * a song of gratitude for His great goodness and mercy. Amen. A.C. (5/14)
